UCLA Study on School Psychologists' Experiences with Children with Autism

Are you a school psychologist who is currently working with children with autism spectrum disorders?

Participation will involve:

- Completion of a brief survey
- A 90-minute focus group

UCLA

We want to find out more about the perspectives of school psychologists and the experiences they have working with children with autism spectrum disorders (ASD) in schools. The goal of this research is to use school psychologists' feedback to improve intervention development and foster a working relationship between autism researchers at universities and the school psychologists who help kids with ASD every day. Participation will involve participation in a 90-minute focus group and completion of a short survey.
