

Lewis Kirts was born in Maryland, where spring smelled like mud and winter was too cold for her comfort. With dairies on the matriarch side of the family, and orchards on the patriarch side, she was raised on peaches and cream.

She credits her love of western movies to her father, and her love of reading to the English teacher of Poolesville High.

Years of working outside in Maryland had her longing for the warmer climate of Arizona.

She now resides in southeastern Arizona, and after thirty years in the Grand Canyon state, she's finally thawing out.

When Lewis Kirts isn't writing, she's Debora Lewis and she's formatting books for authors who want to publish on Amazon and Draft2Digital for print and ebook. She also does book covers for print and ebook.

Debora has been formatting and creating covers for almost twelve years. She learned the process so she could publish her own books, but when her author friends discovered this, they asked her to ready their books for publication. She set her own novels aside for several years and most of her own works were left unpublished.

In 2019, she completed the ninth book in her historical western saga Sendero Esperanza, and revamped her Annie Two Faces short story collection. They are now published and she's added a second short story collection, Timing is Everything, to her western genre. She also published a short story collection of what ifs stories of life, love and friendship and what we might do to keep them close, or follow them Beyond the Stars.

Anyone interested in having their works formatted for publication can contact Debora at deboraklewis@yahoo.com.