COO Update

It is hard to believe back to school time is already here! During this time of year, we are also preparing for our CARF recertification. The process this year will be virtual with the surveyors meeting with our workforce remotely August 22 – 24.

The surveyors will meet first with the senior leadership team for the entry into the certification. From there, either myself, the QI Director and/or someone from the administrative team will visit programs that are being CARFed to provide assistance to staff and surveyors. Here are tips for programs for the day the surveyors come to you.

Cris Riviere

- Prepare a folder for the surveyor with the client orientation papers and/or handbook, program schedules, descriptions of groups and activities, and a printed program procedure manual. Even they though are remote, they still might want to see that you have these items easily accessible to clients.
- Think of some good “bragging points” – specific examples of innovative practices, evidence-based services, family engagement, satisfaction surveys and accessibility – really anything that makes your program stand out. Have a few success stories ready to share with the surveyors.
- Be willing to share some challenges, as well – especially if it is an area of expertise for your surveyor – they enjoy coaching and assisting us. The last couple of years with the COVID-19 pandemic and challenges encountered during that time might be a good place to start. Think of it like that question in job interviews when they ask you to tell them your weaknesses. Talk about something challenging and how your team has been working to improve it.
- It’s important that the surveyors know about some of the events since our last survey, like updates to Credible, Relias, new programs and technology, etc. If your program has had significant leadership, staff, or contract changes since the last survey, talk about it. These are all important events that affect programs and staff.
- Finally, relax. Smile. Take a deep breath. Surveyors are people just like you!

I want to say special thank you our entire ACTS team for all the work you have done to help get the programs ready for CARF. Special thanks to our QI team for their diligent work in making sure ACTS is prepared for CARF. If you have any questions, please reach out to your supervisor. I know ACTS is going to shine during CARF!

On a completely different note, I wanted to let you know that effective July 31, ACTS no longer run the program in Fort Lauderdale. A new company is in charge of that program, and all staff members were offered the opportunity to stay on with the program. I wish all the former ACTS staff members and the girls we served at this program the best of luck in the future.
