About Skip Fredricks

For the past 17 years, Skip has produced award-winning broadcast television in the Los Angeles area. He is a two-time Emmy nominee, and is credited with bringing “extreme sports” to television. During that time, Skip developed a unique style of cinematography that earned him over 40 industry awards. Skip had 10 different television programs/properties that aired on a variety of networks, including Fox Sports Net, USA, Spike TV, HBO, and NBC. Still further, as a director of photography, Skip provided action-themed sports content to the iconic HBO series, “The Sopranos,” and to Universal and Paramount Pictures.

Always a technology innovator, in 2012, Skip was the first 2nd Unit Director on a recent Sci-fi film to shoot aerial cinematography using a drone, the DJI Phantom 1. Since that “close encounter,” he has been utilizing UAV technology to supplement his camera work in the film/TV industry. He is both, a proficient drone pilot and a cutting edge videographer. Currently, his passion is teaching others how to fly drones as a test pilot and flight trainer at the Unmanned Aerial University while maximizing their use of video technology. The goal is creating compelling content for all media platforms from film to TV to the internet using drones. Skip is also now the Program Director for Drone TV.
