Treadmill Stress Test

The purpose of a treadmill stress test is to determine how your heart responds to stress and evaluate your cardiovascular status. You will be asked to walk on a treadmill until you reach a “target” heart rate based on your ability. During the treadmill, you will be closely and continuously monitored for blood pressure, heart rate, EKG rhythm and changes. The exercise portion of the test usually lasts for 5-15 minutes. However, you should allow about an hour for your entire test, which includes preparation, the exercise portion, and the recovery period.

Patient Instructions

1. No large meals for (4) hours prior to the test. A light snack and small amounts of water are permitted.
2. No caffeine for (4) hours prior to the test. Caffeine can cause an increase in your heart rate which can have an impact on your test.
3. Diabetic patients should eat a light breakfast. If you take insulin (pills or injection), please obtain instructions from your primary care physician prior to the test.
4. Please take your regular medications, unless otherwise instructed. Also please bring a list of the medications with you on the day of the test.
5. If you use an inhaler please bring with you on the day of your test.
6. Wear lightweight, comfortable clothes suitable for exercising. Please wear tennis shoes or comfortable close toed shoes suitable for walking or jogging. No flip flops, sandals, dresses, skirts or pantyhose.
7. Please avoid using body lotion, body oils or powder on your chest area. Deodorant is fine to use.
8. Please check in 10 minutes prior to the appointment time.
9. It is required that you sign informed consent prior to the test. The consent describes the purpose, risks and benefits of the test in detail.
