About your Presenter

Richard M. Billow, Ph.D., ABPP, is a clinical psychologist, psychoanalyst, and an active contributor to the psychoanalytic and group literature. He has been associated with the Gordon Derner Institute of Advanced Psychological Studies, Adelphi University, New York, since 1968, where he achieved doctorate and postdoctoral certificates in psychoanalysis, and individual and group psychotherapy. He is Clinical Professor and Director of the Institute's Postdoctoral Program in Group Psychotherapy as well as running his own private practice in Great Neck, New York. He is an AGPA presenter and author of the books Relational Group Psychotherapy - From Basic Assumptions to Passion (2003) and Resistance, Rebellion and Refusal in Groups: The 3 R's (2010). His third book, Developing Nuclear Ideas: Relational Group Psychotherapy will be published later this year.

Workshop Objectives

1. Distinguish different types of process-oriented interventions and their theoretical underpinnings.
2. "All About Me:" Employ a way of (intersubjective) thinking, processing, and formulating that is useful in leading, participating, and reflecting on groups of all types.
3. Utilize relational concepts to understand how group members—including the therapist—interact at preverbal levels, express basic feelings (loving, hating, and curiosity), and develop meaning.
4. Identify as well as experience group enactments that are created at the interface of leader/group (inter) subjectivity, and which lead to resistance, rebellion, and refusal, and optimally, the development of nuclear ideas.
5. Compare and contrast relational group techniques to other approaches.
