

I WONDER IF NSA HAS ANY
SPICY PHONE CALLS
BETWEEN BILL CLINTON
AND ANGELA MERKEL?
HMMMM???????

Anonymous – from o/a September 2013

Borrowed and posted by Stephen L. Bakke
– December 15, 2013

Chancellor Angela Merkel has called President Barack Obama after receiving information that U.S. intelligence may have targeted her mobile phone. Merkel spokesman Steffen Seibert said Merkel made clear in Wednesday's call that 'she views such practices, if the indications are confirmed as completely unacceptable' White House spokesman Jay Carney said President Obama 'assured the chancellor that the United States is not monitoring and will not monitor' her communications. He didn't mention anything about past communications." – According to a report in the Miami Herald, posted on slashdot.org on October 23, 2013.

I wonder if the NSA has any spicy phone calls between Bill Clinton and German Chancellor Angela Merkel? Could that be why Hillary quit as Secretary of State?

Now, let your imagination take over! o/a September 2013, somewhere in Deutschland, a telephone is ringing ringing and then it's picked up

Bill: Angela? This is Bill.

Angela: Oh, hello, mein Billie. Are you alone?

Bill: It all depends on what the meaning of "alone" is.

Angela: Now, Billie, don't start talking that way with me, too!

Bill: Well, what I meant was that Hillary is in the next room but I feel alone. Can you feel my pain?

Angela: I am German. We don't feel.

Bill: Did I ever tell you your name means angel in English?

Angela: Yes, you have mentioned this several times.

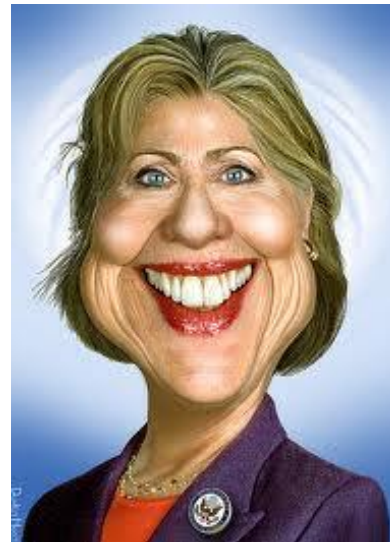

Bill: Well, not to be forward, but that's exactly the right name for you.

Angela: Now don't be a bad boy again, Billie! The last time we talked I couldn't concentrate on the economy for six weeks. I was so verklemt the rest of Europe nearly got me to pay off all their debts!

Bill: Angie – if I may call you that – Angie, did I ever tell you how sexy your German accent is? "Ich liebe dich" is without a doubt the sexiest way of saying "I love you" on the planet! Could you say it for me just this one little time?

Angela: Now, Billie, you know I have work to do. We are very busy this week shredding documents over the latest Jewish art that was stolen, I mean borrowed, during the War. I am in constant contact with the Swiss on the best ways to do this. They are the experts, you know, on hiding Jewish property. I am also working on my "I know nothing" speech. Barry has been very helpful on offering suggestions on that one. And to think, we used to say "I was only following orders," when "I know nothing" is so much simpler!

Bill: OK, Angelica, you go do your work. Being the leader of a country is like running a cemetery: You've got a lot of people under you but nobody's listening. You know, I'm so glad we can speak in private like this. The other day I brought up the lack of communication with Hillary, and all she could do is yell at me, "What difference does it make at this point!" By the way, can you believe how the NSA is spying on people? Next thing you know, we'll find out they listened in on the Norwegians! The hell with the NSA--if she knew about our little calls, Hillary would pillory me. Hey, that rhymes!

Angela: That's a good one, mein Billie! I must go now, my little gewandlichkeitschutzenheimer-grublichmeister. Good bye.

Bill: Oh my god, I'll be playing that over in my head all week! Good bye, honey pot; I mean Chancellor Merkel.

Click!!