A Note from Rick: More of the same for the markets this week. Prices in all categories were slightly lower than a week ago, with the exception of hay. Hay prices have been slowly climbing week after week and when I look back 5 or 6 weeks, I see that hay is significantly higher. I'm not sure about this one. Nothing really stands out as a reason for this. For the most part, we had an adequate growing season and with livestock prices as they are, this is a bit of a surprise. I guess time will tell if this is here to stay for the season or if this is a slight run up that will correct itself. As frustrating as this livestock market is, I looked back at our market reports from a year ago and found that things were very similar to what we have right now. Last year, the down turn started at about the same time as it did this year and started getting better in December and continued stronger into the Spring. Lets all hope this getting better in December and continuing into the Spring part repeats itself as well. I know Veteran's Day was last week, but I want to make sure that we say thank you to all those who have served and are serving our Country today. We are grateful for our military, past and present, and the families that support them. Thank you. See you at TLA!
