Director's Note

In 1988, writer-director John Waters released the now cult classic film Hairspray, the story of a pleasantly plump girl chasing dance stardom while simultaneously standing up against racial segregation. Waters pulled from the things he saw around him in his hometown of Baltimore; The Buddy Deane Show became The Corny Collins Show, The Committee Members became Council Members, and the very real battle of integrating the show in the same country you're sitting in became the backdrop for the show you're seeing today.

In our sixth show, we wanted to present a story told by the many young faces of this community. It's unbelievable to think that only a little over 50 years ago in America a similar diversity was unlawful, but it's absolutely true. There's something powerful about different races, ethnicities, and cultures being educated together and creating art together, as iron sharpening iron. It's our hope that we never again see a time when we can't all just dance together.

As always, we want to thank the Lakeside Drama Association, the parents and students who have always supported our productions, and our audience, for supporting the art form and these wonderful young artists. Enjoy.
