UN Biodiversity Conference (COP 15)

Montreal is presently hosting this summit with the following goals:

In delivering on biodiversity, we deliver on climate, on pollution, on the UN Decade of Ecosystem Restoration, and on the food and energy system transformation. So let us ensure that this COP will be remembered as the moment we finally set our societies and economies on the path to rebuilding the biodiversity upon which we all rely. Inger Andersen - UN Under-Secretary-General and UNEP Executive Director

What needs to happen at COP 15: Adoption of an equitable and comprehensive framework matched by the resources needed for implementation clear targets to address overexploitation, pollution, fragmentation and unsustainable agricultural practices.

- * Adoption of an equitable and comprehensive framework matched by the resources needed for implementation.
- * Clear targets to address overexploitation, pollution, fragmentation and unsustainable agricultural practices.
- * A plan that safeguards the rights of indigenous peoples and recognizes their contributions as stewards of nature.
- * Finance for biodiversity and alignment of financial flows with nature to drive finances toward sustainable investments and away from environmentally harmful ones.

Pope Francis recognizes the need for the protection and proliferation of all life, plant and animal in our world. From Laudato si'

35. In assessing the environmental impact of any project, concern is usually shown for its effects on soil, water and air, yet few careful studies are made of its impact on biodiversity, as if the loss of species or animals and plant groups were of little importance. Highways, new plantations, the fencing-off of certain areas, the damming of water sources, and similar developments, crowd out natural habitats and, at times, break them up in such a way that animal populations can no longer migrate or roam freely. As a result, some species face extinction. Alternatives exist which at least lessen the impact of these projects, like the creation of biological corridors, but few countries demonstrate such concern and foresight. Frequently, when certain species are exploited commercially, little attention is paid to studying their reproductive patterns in order to prevent their depletion and the consequent imbalance of the ecosystem.
