

PLAMBOROUGH HEAD : Here we can see how landslips, mudflows and rainwash (sub-aerial processes) have transported material from the boulder clay at the top of the cliff to the lower cliff to cover the chalk.

This is on the west facing cliff of the South Landing sheltered from high energy waves approaching from the north east that would be able to easily remove this fine clay material.

