Advisory Board: An advisory board is made up of volunteers who offer their input, ideas, and expert advice to an organization's elected board of directors. Advisory board members are not legally bound but are important to the success of the organization through working with the board of directors. Without a strong board, nonprofit organizations may have limited success in meeting client and community expectations and needs.

What is an Advisory Board?

- Nonprofit organizations are structured through a board of directors whose members are responsible for running the organization through designated positions which usually consist of a president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer. The board sets policies for ensuring excellent management.
- An Advisory board, on the other hand, helps organizations get feedback, ideas, and opinions from the public. It does not have any legal or formal responsibilities but is convened to give advice and support to the board of directors.
- Having an effective advisory board is critical to organizational success. An advisory board plays an instrumental public relations role and provides the board with a fresh perspective on program issues. An advisory board works directly with the directors to brainstorm, discuss, debate, and decide major organizational decisions.
- Advisory Board Member Role: A Key to building a secure organization is having an independent advisory board of community leaders, parents, and other interested people. Advisory board members are volunteers and should reflect diversified representation from various cultures, socioeconomic groups, and urban and rural settings.
- Some advisory board members take responsibility for specific tasks while others only attend meetings and provide input and feedback. All members are expected to carry out a specific function independently. An advisory member's focus should be helping the board of directors with certain responsibilities, not replacing it. Both boards should work in a team effort with the organization's best interests in mind.
- Advisory board members usually attend between 2 to 12 board meetings each year to share information, discuss ideas, and make decisions. Once a structure is in place, the board can distribute its governing functions and responsibilities equally among its members to maximize its effectiveness.
