Kennel Cough

Infectious Bronchitis- otherwise known as “Kennel Cough” is a very contagious disease of the respiratory system, which affects dogs of all ages. The disease is caused by a mixture of viruses and bacteria, which pass easily from dog to dog especially in boarding kennels. Affected dogs typically develop a very harsh, dry, hacking cough, which can often last several weeks causing sleepless nights and worry for all concerned. The cough can be so severe that it often sounds as if the dog is choking. The dog may run a temperature, go off his or her food, and become quite lethargic- similar symptoms to human ‘flu’. Kennel cough can sometimes be fatal.

Kennel Cough can be prevented. We insist that your dog is vaccinated against Kennel Cough, and will insist on seeing the relevant paperwork before taking your pet. The vaccine is squirted up the nostril, rather than being injected under the skin on the neck. We recommend that the vaccine is given at least 1 to 2 weeks in advance of attending kennels. This is a precautionary vaccine NOT a preventative vaccine. Do not take any chances with Kennel Cough!

If it is not given within the time period recommended and you board, it is understood that leaving your pet unprotected will be at your own risk and will not hold Paws ‘n Purrs Pet Care responsible if our pet becomes ill. _____ (please initial)

Be sure to vaccinate your animal if you plan to board. I also understand that if my pet(s) vaccines lapse and I choose to board before they are updated I will not hold Paws ‘n Purrs Pet Care responsible if my pet becomes ill in any way during their stay. _____ (please initial)
