Biden invites U.N. to investigate racism in the U.S.

By Steve Bakke  August 18, 2021

According to Reuters, here's what Biden's Secretary of State recently announced: "The U.S. State Department has invited U.N. experts who investigate racism and minority issues to conduct an official visit to the United States." The focus is to be on systemic racism in law enforcement.

The U.N.'s Human Rights Council will be conducting the investigation. Membership on the Council rotates and at present includes 47 countries including the following: Saudi Arabia, China, Pakistan, Uzbekistan, Russian Federation, Cuba, Somalia, and Bangladesh. Do any of these countries have a separate agenda involving an investigation of the U.S.? Are there any conflicts of interest? Are these countries all pillars of civil liberties?

Need I explain further the absurdity of those countries sitting in judgement of civil rights practices in the United States? This seems to be a world-class example of naïve "virtue signaling" by the Biden administration. What could go wrong?
