

LOOSE THREADS

November 2018, Volume 88, Issue 11 www.napavalleyquilters.org

Welcome to November my quilting friends. It's starting to look like fall and I am more than ready to be able to spend time in the fifth wheel and to take some "glamping" trips.

Linda and I enjoyed our trip over to KOA Petaluma this past week. The weather was beautiful and the company great. I got a lot of sewing time in, without any guilt what so ever.

I would like to thank all our committee and board members that make our Guild run. These ladies put in a lot of time and energy to bring you a quality Quilt Guild experience. I would be lost without them. Thank you my friends.

Thank you. Cyndy Clark, President

Korean Textiles (Patchwork): Bojagi

Bojagi

Patchworked bojagi (jogakbo) were made exclusively by and for the common people using various colors of small remnants. Jogakbo are comparable to modern abstract paintings. The talent and aesthetic sense that created a work of art from discarded scraps of cloths were sufficient to make jogakbo excellent works of art.

While making jogakbo, women wished for the recipients' good luck and happiness. This is why bojagi were also called bok meaning both a wrapping cloth and good luck in Korean. Something made with much care was believed to bring good luck and happiness. Thus, it seems that making a great effort to patch together the scraps of cloth was regarded as a medium for asking for good luck. In addition, connecting small pieces of cloths was associated with long life.
