3. ADITONAL INFORMATION

This painting consists of two canvases:

- The right one is representing the colors of the desert during the winter time, after the rain – the manifold plants that surprisingly show themselves in beautiful bright green colors. Many of these plants can be eaten or have herbal medicine power, used by the Bedouins back in the day to survive the rough desert climate. The sky and the rain create a feeling of blue in the air which was captured as well.
- The left side in contrast shows the desert during the dry stage where it is driven by the colors of yellow, shapes of the dunes, the sand and the heat that feels burning hot – like red.
