High Mountain Citrus... Taking Hydration To A New Level!

The History

About 500 years ago, the native Kamsa Indians of the Amazon rain forest region in southern Colombia, began creating a beverage from raw, unrefined cane extract, known as panela. The Kamsa Indians quickly grew fond of their new discovery, learning the drink kept them hydrated in their extreme climate. Their new beverage was loaded with electrolytes and polyphenols, two ingredients that are critical for long-lasting hydration and health.

It took a smart entrepreneur, Nicolas Bonilla, who grew up in Colombia, where panela is common. He realized the benefits of this amazing beverage. The every-day drink produced by the Kamsa people over five hundred 500 years ago, is a way to maintain good hydration – and it tastes great.

Nicolas, was determined to improve the Indian's fine beverage, by adding modern-day flavors and refining the ingredients.

We call it Kamsa: a brand that pays homage to the Kamsa native Indians.
