Program Description

The Marketing program examines economic concepts to aid in understanding marketing and business. The skills, techniques, and attitude necessary for the salesperson to assist customers in making purchasing decisions are presented. Students will also examine the relational skills necessary to be successful in the workplace, be exposed to the background skills and knowledge needed for a career in merchandising, and explore various marketing careers.

At the advanced level, students learn and practice the competencies in marketing functions through classroom activities and practical experience via class projects. Students will be involved with marketing functions including product/service planning, distribution, pricing, promotion, risk management, visual merchandising, selling, and purchasing. Students will prepare for the world of work through the application process in searching and obtaining employment as well as practices dealing with maintaining and leaving a job.

Special Features

Leadership opportunities available through DECA (student marketing organization). Students in the DECA program attend district, state and national competitions.

Work-based learning opportunities available.
