Deep Thoughts

By Jerry Silvestro

Hi Friends and Neighbors,

I think I might have a problem. For some unfathomable reason, I can't seem to throw things away when they no longer work, fit, are in style or simply serve no purpose anymore. There are some things that, for obvious reasons, can't be kept, such as an old furnace that has to be replaced. It's not quite feasible to keep an old furnace hanging around when the new one is being installed.

I came to this realization when a friend of mine bought a Keurig coffeemaker as a gift. I have a perfectly good coffeemaker already so there's no way I would throw it away. I unplugged it and stored it under the counter where I discovered two more coffeemakers that I had stored in there, both of them because the "Carafe" had shattered. Luckily, I have a lot of cabinet space.

This little incident prompted me to start checking other cupboards, drawer and storage spaces that I have not peered into in many a year.

Entering the guest bedroom that has not seen a "Guest" in a decade, I opened the drawers. I discovered two blow dryers that I surely don't need anymore. Also, three, count 'em, three Wahl hair clippers that I didn't know I possessed. There was a plastic case of hair curlers that I guess you could plug in to heat them.

In the utility room I discovered two electric weed sprayers, two irons that had some green stuff on them and an electric screwdriver that no longer works.

Ah, but the attic was a treasure trove of no longer useful stuff. A portable television that weighs about 100 lbs. Two video recorders. Three monstrously large AM-FM-CD players. A desktop computer.

Here is the sad fact. An old piece of furniture may qualify as an antique. Old clothing can become cleaning rags. But an old electrical appliance is junk.

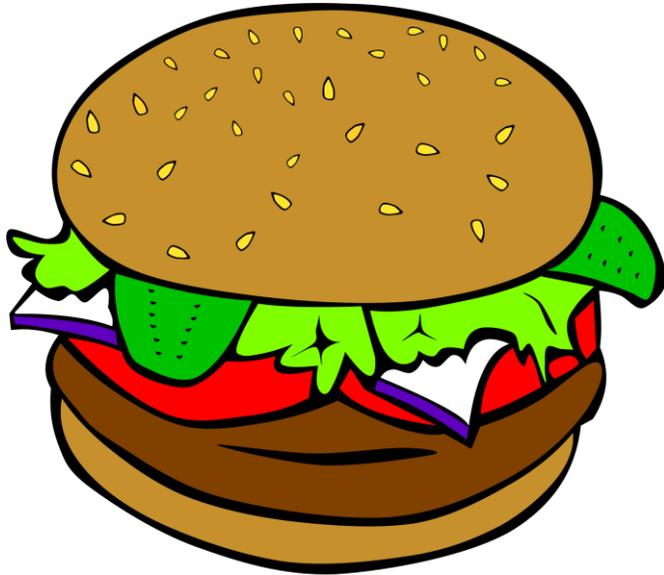

We haven't had electrical appliances for all that long, in terms of the history of the world or even the history of the United States and yet most (All?) of the ones we grew up with are obsolete.

I suppose one day I'll heave all this crap out. But there is a third bedroom.....

Stay Well & God Bless

SELF-IMPROVEMENT

CONSISTENCY

One of the most important ingredients for success is consistent behavior. When performing any task or learning anything new the main focus should be on doing the task or learning in a consistent manner. Not once in a while or when you feel like it, but in a routine that brings steady and measurable results. Once in a while will not achieve success, you must be consistent with your routine of learning to achieve any kind of measurable increased results. Doing things in a haphazard manner will not work and will actually set your progress back forcing you to curtail or even quit your goals altogether. Lack of consistency = 's failure.
