I believe we always know in our hearts what makes TLS special. We feel it and sense it and live it every minute of every day. Even when it gets hard, and while it is exhausting and trying, the spirit of TLS is alive in every one of us.

There are certain days, though, when the magic of TLS is right in front of us and we can touch it and name it and revel in it and become rejuvenated by it.

Today was one of those days. Thank you for such a wonderful Field Day. Your love for the kids and the school and our culture is ever-present, and today it was especially tangible and inspiring. Thank you for your extra effort at the end of a long, tiring week.

But my overwhelming sense at the end of today is this:

I want you to know that I recognize and appreciate your incredible effort on the days that are NOT like today. I am especially thankful, today, for your admirable work and dedication on the ordinary, hard, exhausting, trying days when we must feel and sense and trust the TLS magic, rather than see it in front of us.

Humbled am I for the reminder.

Enjoy your much-deserved weekend.

Onward,
Brooke
