

Andrew Scott

There may be no better place to nurture creativity than on the dreamy desert landscape where Andrew Scott grew up in Mexican Water, Arizona. As the youngest Navajo youngster from a large family, Andrew grew up without running water, plumbing, or electricity and was subsequently uninhibited by the technological distractions available to many others. Even after leaving the reservation to marry and support his family, he seemed to carry the tranquility of wandering cliffs, red rock, and rainwater pools inside him. Andrew is skilled in design, a craftsman able to build and create with many materials. He loves working with wood, leather, and furs, but is equally as skilled with graphite or paint, and of course, most know that he is a talented hair stylist. Andrew considers day to day stress his greatest challenge to making art, but feels very alive and inspired when he has the opportunity to connect with his creative flow. Regardless of the craft presented, Andrew's artwork always honors, always beautifies, and always uplifts; and what a truthful representation that is of the artist himself.
