

The great John Calvin argued that the Scriptures are self-authenticating. Because it has the Holy Spirit as its author, that same Holy Spirit, who indwells the regenerate believer, will recognize the Bible as His work. When I first came to Christ, it took no strong evidence to convince me of the authority of the Bible.

“The Spirit Himself bears witness with our spirits that we are children of God” (Rom. 8:16). He also bears witness that the Bible is what we claim it is—the unerring Word of God. I would almost say that one’s reverence for the Bible is a barometer of one’s spiritual condition. The fuller we are of the Spirit the more ardently we cherish God’s Word. And how can the learned, unregenerate professors of “higher criticism” understand the book they profess to criticize? May the Bible itself bear witness against them in the day of accounting! All for Jesus, Richard

Jody's blog describes him best: "I'm married to Lisa who is a rabid SEC football fan, the hardest working human being I have ever known, and has explored and conquered an intimidating mountain called forgiveness. Which is good, because I have ventured into a valley called failure. We raised two boys who grew up to become very fine men, though they are as different from one another as Jacob and Esau. They married two very beautiful young women who also happen to be quite pretty on the outside. Daughters-in-law are awesome. We have two dogs and when they die we will probably get two more. We do not have cats because I am allergic. To evil. I often laugh loudly at things no one else in the room finds funny. Especially if I'm the one who said or did the thing. I was a preacher. Then I was a physician recruiter. Now, I am a preacher again. Most of all I am a follower of Jesus, though I know what it is to stray."
