Every April 22, we celebrate Earth Day—a time to focus on the planet’s health. Get your youngster involved, and encourage her to focus on her own health, too, with these ecofriendly activities.

Enjoy a waste-free meal

Can your family eat an entire meal without wasting any food? One idea is to cut food into smaller pieces before family members serve themselves. For example, set out platters of grilled chicken strips, baked potato halves, and apple slices. Encourage everyone to take only what they think they will eat.

Throw a leftovers “party”

With your youngster, look through your refrigerator, and make a list of left-overs or other items that need to be eaten soon. Then, she could use her list to create a menu for a meal of leftovers. For instance, she might suggest a casserole with leftover rice and veggies or banana pudding made with overripe bananas for dessert.

Join a cleanup

Participate in a neighborhood or park cleanup, and enjoy a picnic afterward. Get trash bags and gloves for picking up litter. Let your child help you pack nutritious foods, such as turkey wraps and fruit salad, in reusable containers. After you’ve worked up a sweat cleaning up the trash, wash your hands, and eat together.
