FEATHERS IN THE WIND

Finally! My hair is growing back.

I had been told it would take two or three months before my hair fell out. Ha! The very first time I took a shower and was frying my face I kept wondering why all those strands of hair were falling in my face.

Those of you who know me know that I normally have thick hair so this made no sense except when I looked in the mirror and realized I could pass for a mid evil monk without even the little ring of hair around the edge.

Charlemagne didn't even say a word - I think he was in shock.

It is now ten months later and Charlemagne keeps going past me - rubbing the "stubble" on my head. He says it has the color and feel of an opossum.

We just celebrated our 47th anniversary. Will we make it to 50? At this rate, only the lord knows.

Seriously, Charlemagne went to every one of my appointments and sat through every one of my six hour infusions, not to mention that "lovely" time I had to spend almost a month in the hospital.

I don't know how he puts up with me, but if he wants to pat my head it's OK with me - just don't any of you try it. Opossums bite, remember! BSH
