The manufacturers of epinephrine auto-injectors have extended their U.S. savings programs through 2018.

Epinephrine is the only treatment for a severe allergic reaction known as anaphylaxis (anna-fih-LACK-sis). It is only available through a prescription by your doctor. Each prescription comes with two auto-injectors in a two-pack.

People with food allergies should have two epinephrine auto-injectors available to them at all times. For children, this might mean needing more than one two-pack. For example, your child may need to keep two auto-injectors at school and two auto-injectors at after-school care. Another set of two typically stays at home. For adults, two auto-injectors may be enough.

Here are the updated savings offers for epinephrine auto-injectors, as well as other ideas to try to save money on drug costs this year. Your final co-pay, if any, may vary depending on your insurance plan and the deductibles for your family. Discuss with your doctor which epinephrine auto-injector device is the right one for your family.
