Women in the Military

For over 3,000 years in a large number of cultures and nations, women have played many roles in the military, from ancient warrior women, to the women currently serving in conflicts, although the vast majority of all combatants in every culture have been men.

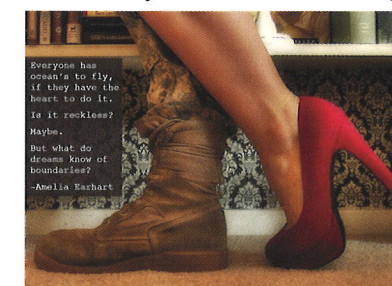

Even though women serving in the military has often been controversial, a very small number of women in history have fought alongside men. In the U.S., women have been part of the war effort since the Revolutionary War. During the Revolutionary, Civil and Mexican Wars, a small number of women were involved in combat, but they had to disguise themselves as men and enlist under aliases. Fighting on the battlefield in disguise was not the only way women involved themselves in war. Some also served as nurses and aides.

During WWI, the U.S. Navy and Marine Corps allowed women to enlist. More than 12,000 enlisted and about 400 died during the war. In WWII, a total of 350,000 women served in the U.S. military. After WWII, women continued to break new ground in the U.S. military.

As the weapons and methods of warfare changed in the late 20th century, the Pentagon began to realize that gender matters less on the battlefield. Over 40,000 women served in the 1991 Gulf War and engaged with enemy forces on an unprecedented level. This was the first war where women served with men in integrated units within a warzone. In 1994, women in the military suffered a setback. Defense Secretary Les Aspin implemented a rule that prohibited women from serving in units "whose primary mission is to engage in direct ground combat." Despite the 1994 rule, women continued to play more active roles in the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

In January 2013, Defense Secretary Leon Panetta announced that the ban on women serving in combat roles would be lifted. In a January 9 letter to Panetta urging the change Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen.

Not all women wear pearls and sensible shoes to work, some wear dog tags and combat boots.

Martin Dempsey said, "The time has come to rescind the direct combat exclusion rule for women and to eliminate all unnecessary gender-based barriers to service." The move reversed the 1994 rule that prohibited women from serving in combat.

On December 3, 2015, the Pentagon announced that all combat jobs would be open to women. In a press conference, Defense Secretary Ashton Carter said that "there will be no exceptions" to the new rule. The historic announcement overrides the 1994 rule made by the Pentagon that restricted women from combat roles such as infantry, artillery, and armor. As of 2015, women made up about 15% of the U.S. military. More than 165,000 women were enlisted and active in the armed services with over 35,000 additional women serving as officers.
