

WATER AND SEDIMENT CONTROL STRUCTURE

An embankment is built across a depression area of concentrated water runoff to act similar to a terrace. It traps sediment and water running off farmland above the structure, preventing it from reaching farmland below.

These basins improve water quality by trapping sediment on uplands and preventing it from reaching water bodies.

