

CENTRAL BARK CANINE EVENTS PRESENTS:

LUCY NEWTON SCENT SEMINARS!

Lucy is an award-winning professional K9 handler and trainer with a wealth of knowledge and experience to share. From her home in North Carolina, Lucy trains detection dogs and coaches both working and sport dog handlers. Lucy also serves as an instructor for the Randy Hare School for Dog Trainers, teaching detection training to police, military and other professional trainers. She is also an instructor for the Fenzi Dog Sports Academy, applying the same principles she uses to train working dogs to nosework detection dogs. Whether you are a beginner or already have a title or two under your belt, Lucy's teaching methods can help you and your dog get the best out of this sport and most importantly, have fun doing it.

A little bit about Lucy:

- Fifteen years with search and rescue. Lucy deployed on hundreds of missing person cases and also provided training to search and rescue dog handlers and their canines.
- Ten years as a full-time police sergeant, canine handler and instructor. Lucy has received awards for life-saving finds made by her working dogs and has successful finds for human remains detection, evidence recovery and narcotics detection.
- Ten years as an instructor for detection courses throughout the country teaching civilian, police, and military personnel how to properly train detection dogs.
- Working with Find It Detection Dogs, a conservation group that employs detection dogs for wildlife research and conservation work.
- Tracking and Nosework instructor for the Fenzi Dog Sports Academy

Additional information about Lucy and our Seminar:

Lucy's gift as a dog trainer comes from her ability to combine both the science and the art of dog training. She has a strong understanding of how dogs learn along with plenty of practical real job experience handling both sport and working dogs.

Lucy can break a specific task down in a way that allows the dog to learn effectively. Her science background allows her to approach dog training in an analytical, systematic, results oriented way. And her extensive experience working with dogs and trainers allows her to understand the art of training as well.

Lucy's specialty is helping trainers break down and streamline the process of teaching the dog necessary skills for a task. Lucy's goal is create working dogs that clearly understand and enjoy their work and perform it well. The goal is dogs working in drive, under a high level of distraction. Her training methods are clear, understandable, fair and effective.

Regardless of what she is training, Lucy's training philosophy emphasizes allowing the dog to satisfy his drive and to control his own avenue to reinforcement. Her goal is to create highly motivated, thinking dogs that understand the task being asked of them. Regardless of the work, her goal is to develop dogs that can work independently of the handler and be accurate and successful under a variety of conditions. She specializes in helping handlers understand how dogs communicate and learn in order to create better performances as well as to develop a better working relationship regardless of the venue. She is also a skilled, patient communicator, which is a great asset when working with the two-legged end of the leash.

This series of seminars is an excellent opportunity to learn a new set of skills or work through a challenge that you are having with your dog or training regimen.

Scent theory applies to Nosework, Tracking, Barn Hunt, Search and Rescue and MORE! This seminar would be appropriate for a handler studying all/any of them.

The working spots are HIGHLY limited and working dogs will get intense and frequent opportunities to work- allowing the handler and the auditors to see a development and progression over THAT DAY.

Dogs entered in the WORKING SPOTS for TRACKING (10/6) and SCENT THEORY PRACTICAL (10/8) should be experienced dogs (not their first exposure).

The Scent Theory Lab (10/7) will study scent and is open to all levels as it is mostly in classroom study.
