Will It Be Martial Law?

An extremely interesting and revealing article titled "Delta Force Stand-Ins Fight Terror" appeared in the July 2, 1989 issue of the Los Angeles Times. The major thrust of the article was to tell about the training of foreign forces by the U.S. Delta Force for the purpose of fighting terrorism on foreign soil. Congress has limited the authority of the Delta Force in foreign disputes.

The part of the article that was of profound importance to the Christian Patriot Movement in the United States in its fight against Communism and world imperialist government, was several statements made by Delta Force personnel and Seal Team Six personnel. The Seal Team Six is the Navy equivalent of the Army's Delta Force.

Quoting from the article, "Officially, the United States has not acknowledged the use of Delta Force - or even its existence -since the disastrous 1980 hostage rescue attempt in Iran. But Delta and its Navy counterpart, Seal Team Six, have been deployed in a variety of unusual ways and unlikely places, even within the United States."

"Fear of terrorist attacks led to the dispatch of Delta Force and Seal Team Six to the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles and the 1986 celebration in New York of the Statue of Liberty's centennial, according to former officers in the secret units."

Now read this carefully, "To evade restrictions on domestic use of the military, the government 'legalized' the commandos through various means, including deputizing troops as U.S. marshals, the sources said." (emphasis mine-ed.)

"'We've been used much more than the public knows,' said a former Navy Seal. 'We're involved in a few operations every year, some in an advisory capacity, others directly.'" End of quotes.

The significance of these statements is truly extraordinary. Those within the government at all levels who are working toward a one-world socialist government (and that appears to be the biggest share of them) are paranoid over one thing. They are immensely afraid of the weapons in the hands of the American citizen, particularly the Christian patriot.

They are not fearful or concerned about those wimps who will run right down and respond dutifully when the legislation is passed to either register guns or turn them in. They are anxious and apprehensive over that huge group of Americans who consider themselves up against the wall in regard to the gun issue and who will not retreat another step. They are most frantic over the group who attach themselves to the genuine, "old fashioned" Christianity wherein they are not afraid to die for their beliefs.

The government has penetrated churches, clubs, so-called "para-military" training groups, and even small groups who get together for lunch occasionally to talk about current affairs. These despicable informants have reported to their "masters" that those who intend to keep their weapons are simply waiting for the government to declare "Martial Law." Most all of our people consider the Constitution to be the true basis of law in this country and they would not intentionally or knowingly go against the Constitution while it is in effect.

But when "Martial Law" is declared, the Constitution is no longer the law of the land. It is revoked and replaced with what amounts to a military dictatorship in much the same way as Latin American countries have been doing for scores of years. Those with the most weapons usually win. Most Americans know very well that a large share of men in uniform will not fight against their own people, particularly if the soldier is of their own ethnic background. They also recognize that there are more rifles, shotguns, and hand guns in the hands of the American public than in all of the standing armies of the world put together.

Now the master planners, those sneaky little maggots, who plan eventually to remove our Constitution and replace it with theirs, such as "Newstates of America Constitution", know of our love affair with the United States Constitution as a basis for law and government. These "master planners" have rationalized that as long as the Constitution is in effect, the American people will be reticent to take up arms.

Now suppose they figure out a way to do their dirty deeds without actually declaring "Martial Law." Suppose they call it "Martial Rule" instead of "Martial Law." By doing this, they would declare that the Constitution is still in effect. Thus, any group, large or small, who will not turn in their weapons, or anything else the government dictates when the Presidential Emergency Order is given, would be declared seditious or traitorous. They have the power to deputize every soldier, sailor and national guardsman in the military as deputy U.S. Marshals.

Can they do this? They have already done it! The article in the Los Angeles Times simply gives an example of that determination.

The debate over "Martial Law" has been around for a long time. The Department of Defense recognizes that, within our Constitution, there is a question of lawfulness if the military is ordered to declare "Martial Law" over the citizens of the United States. This debate became extensive during the early days of the Federal Emergency Management Agency \(FEMA\) while it was being developed in California by the then-Governor Ronald Reagan and his advisor, Edwin Meese. A Col. Guiffrida moved to Washington with Reagan and Meese and completed the organizational concepts on a national level. The debate over "Martial Law" was extensive during the "Garden Plot", "Cable Splicer" and "Rex-84" programs wherein the military (primarily National Guardsmen) conducted training exercises to put down "civil unrest."

In working with FEMA, the Dept. of Defense was given the replacement phrase, "Martial Rule." All of the governments of the world recognize the term "Martial Law." It means the same thing everywhere. When it is declared, the constitution of that country is suspended for as long as the military is in command. But with "Martial Rule", these "master planners" believe that they will still have the Constitution and have military command at the same time. The "Rex-84" program is essentially a massive detention center program where they plan to incarcerate all "seditionists" during a declared "national emergency." They will simply be declared felons and the government will attempt to enforce the law with several million Deputy U.S. Marshals.

To give some encouragement to this situation, in California, the state legislature is being presented a bill which would provide for road blocks on various highways in the state. The road blocks would be used to search for weapons and all people possessing certain weapons in their vehicles, would be declared felons and arrested.

Some people of California are now developing a new organization, simply titled FFA. This stands for "Future Felons of America!" God bless the convictions and tenacity, as well as the humor, of the great American people. Long live the Republic!

What Border?

Past issues of THE INTELLIGENCE NEWSLETTER have discussed the "United States-Mexico Free Trade and Co-Production Zone." Since 1985, members of Congress have introduced bills that would have provided for a type of "Hong Kong" along the United States-Mexico border. The first bill, H.R. 3199 was to provide for a strip of land along the Southern border, which was to be 200 miles deep and stretching from the California coast to the Texas coast. A like 200 mile strip was to be in Mexico. The bill died without action. However, a similar bill, H.R. 1099 was reintroduced in 1987. It didn't specify the actual size of the "Free Trade Zone" but in veiled terms it reflected the thinking of the earlier 1985 bill. That bill died in committee also.

Then, in 1988, H. Con. Res. 247 was introduced which simply stated that it was "Expressing the sense of the Congress that the President should immediately enter into negotiations to establish a free trade area between the United States and Mexico." This appears to be the way that Congress is accomplishing the establishment of the "Free Trade Zone." The Executive Branch seems to be establishing the "Free Trade Zone" by regulation and action even though there is no "law" which has been passed.

Recently, one of the larger newspapers in the Southwest sent two reporters to the cities, towns and rural areas along the border to find out what the living conditions are now like. They were to determine the changes that have come about since the advent of such things as the massive immigration, the Amnesty program, the Twin Plant Concept (The Maquiladora Program) and the drug problem.

In general, the reporters discovered that there was no border! People come and go, to and from Mexico as though there was no control. The U.S. Border Patrol has been in the process of constructing check points on the various highways leading from the border. These check points are located approximately 100 miles from the border.

It is at these check points that ALL vehicles are stopped and the occupants are asked the question, "What is your nationality?" It is at these check points that many vehicles are searched for drugs, weapons and for any other reason deemed necessary.

It used to be that the Border Patrol would not stop vehicles that were being driven by persons who were obviously American. That is not the case now. Local citizens of obvious American heritage are asked such questions as: "Where have you been?" "What were you doing there?" "Where are you going?" "Where is your home?" Those Americans living in the border states have become foreigners in their own land!

National Voter Registration Act of 1989

To compound this border problem, there is now an effort to make it easier for illegal immigrants to vote. The NATIONAL VOTER REGISTRATION ACT OF 1989 (H.R. 15) was introduced on January 3, 1989. A similar companion bill, H.R. 17, was introduced on the same day. A brief summary of these bills follows:

To establish national voter registration procedures for Presidential and congressional elections, and for other purposes.

States shall establish procedures to permit voter registration; 1. Simultaneously with application for a motor vehicle driver's license; 2. By mail application; 3. By application in person, either at an appropriate registration office, or at a Federal, State or private sector location (agency registration).

Drivers License Application Registration; 1. Except when an individual declines in writing, the application for or the renewal of a motor vehicle driver's license shall also serve as an application for voter registration; 2. The voter registration application shall be part of the motor vehicle driver's license application, shall not require information which duplicates the driver's license portion of the form, shall include a box or other device to permit an applicant to decline to register, shall require only sufficient information to prevent duplicate registration and to permit an assessment of eligibility, shall include a statement of penalties for false registration; 3. A driver's license change of address notice shall serve as a voter registration change of address.

Mail Registration. 1. Each state shall develop a mail voter registration application form, requiring sufficient information to assess eligibility as well as a statement of penalties involved for a false application. Notarization or other forms of authentication is not allowed. Forms shall be readily available for public and private distribution and especially for organized registration programs.

Agency Registration. 1. State, Federal and private sector locations shall be designated for the distribution and processing of voter registration applications. Offices providing public assistance, unemployment compensation and related services shall be included in the designated locations; 2. The Federal Government shall cooperate in this program.

Other Requirements. 1. Registration cut-off is 25 days before an election; 2. State election officials will notify each applicant of the disposition of the application; 3. A voter may be purged only (1) at the request of the voter, (2) death, (3) criminal conviction, mental incapacity or change in residence, (4) failure to vote in each of two consecutive Presidential elections or in a Presidential general election and at least one congressional election or election for State office before the next Presidential general election. A voter who holds a valid driver's license may not be purged for non-voting; 4. The Federal Election Commission will coordinate functions under this Act. The Attorney General may bring civil action to carry out the instructions of this Act. End of summary.

Another bill, S-675, introduced by Senator Allan Cranston, concerns the same subject and is also of tremendous importance to us as American citizens. It is suggested that you obtain a copy of all three of these bills from your local Representative's or Senator's office.

These bills will enable immigrants who are NOT citizens of the United States to vote. In H.R. 17, the following statement is made, "...That the congress finds that, 1. The right to vote is fundamental in a democracy, and it is the duty of the Federal, State, and local governments to maximize the exercise of that right in elections for Federal office...."

The underlying purposes of these bills are to, 1. Provide for additional U.S. Representatives in the areas where there is a large non-white, non-American community. It is obvious that if these people are allowed to vote, they will vote for one of their own people. They will also vote for Federal and State officials who would be subservient to their desires; 2, Provide for an easier method to allow for increased welfare in these areas; 3. Provide for laws and customs that are totally foreign to the American way of life.

The end result, and probably the most important purpose, is to permit some loose form of secession of the Southwestern states. Of course, they would want to stay under the protection and welfare system of "Uncle Sucker". When the demographics of these people in areas all over the country have enough clout in Congress with their own Representatives, that is exactly what they will do.

If these bills pass, the final nails will be driven into the coffin of the American way of life. It is a known fact that Americans are so disillusioned with the totally corrupt political system in our country that most citizens do not vote. It is obvious that, as fewer old-time American families vote, the more effective these illegal votes will be. These families will, of course, become even more disillusioned and come closer to the breaking point as these things happen to them.

It would seem logical that the government is fully cognizant of this line of reasoning. It is undoubtedly one of the reasons for all of the paranoia over gun control and confiscation.

Just some of the organizations that are pushing for the passage of these bills are: The Lawyers Committee for Civil Rights, American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), Leadership Council on Civil Rights, Jessie Jackson (Rainbow Coalition), League of Women Voters, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), and National Coalition for Black Voter Participation.

A Lesson In History Part 4

The discussion of the Masonic Order in the last issue prepared the way for the study of the revolutions, civil wars and the two World Wars that the world has had to endure over the past 800 years. As a person begins to study this history, it seems impossible that there could be a singular motivating purpose behind all of them. But as we continue to present undisputed historical facts, we will learn that it is true what Franklin Roosevelt said, "Nothing ever happens in politics by chance. It is all planned."

It is understood that most all of the wars are fought with somewhat different enemies. This would give the impression that these wars just happen for many different reasons. Thus, it is normal for a person to discourage the thought of conspiracy.

Mr. E.C. Knuth in his book, The Empire of the City, discusses the book America's Strategy in World Politics by Professor Nicholas J. Spykman of Yale University. Mr. Knuth states this, "Prof. Spykman describes the British policies in foreign affairs, which he alleges have earned her the designation of 'Perfidious Albion,' in his treatment of 'Britain and the Balance of Power' (pages 103 to 107). He develops the British policy as a constant succession of cycles of shift partners, isolation, alliance and war; and the defeat of Napoleon marked the end of one of these cycles. A tabulation of the modern wars of the world which follows immediately herein, and which assumes the Napoleonic War as modern cyclical war No.1, would indicate the present war (WW II) as cyclical war No.7, and very possibly as cyclical war No.1 of a new grand cycle." 1

That quote definitely indicates that the "cycles" of war were going on before the Napoleonic War. This series of Lessons In History should show that this is indeed the case. It also shows that Prof. Spykman believes that there has been a planned shifting of partners and alliances in what has been termed the "World Revolutionary Movement (WRM)."

It is no longer of value to discuss political parties and their platforms in an attempt to solve the evils of the world. It is now only necessary to discuss "nationalism" versus "internationalism." The nationalism can be further divided into Christian Nationalism versus Atheistic Nationalism.

To go with the idea of nationalism, we must understand that private ownership of property, in Alloidal Title, is necessary. Alloidal Title means full and free possession, without any rent (revenue) or services. In the internationalist concept, property never actually belongs to the individual. The Title for property is always with reservations and in control of the government. The argument is control versus ownership of the property between the two systems.

Further, the Nationalist concept is concerned for the well being of the people of the nation. Production of commodities is for the needs of the nation. Surplus commodities may be sold to other nations but only when they are not in competition with that nation's production. Raw materials, where necessary are purchased from other nations holding those possessions. The Nationalist system is such that a minimum of political involvement with other nations and other peoples not of the same ethnic background is necessary.

Conversely, the Internationalist concept requires that all aspects of life of every nation in the world be interdependent with each other. Obviously, such a system requires a singular super central government to regulate and direct these multitude of peoples. The argument always is that such a system is good for the world economics and consequently all of us benefit. In addition, the argument is that "The world is so much smaller now, thanks to the transportation and communications systems."

The Internationalist concept also requires that different ethnic peoples of the world are to be intermingled. This is done to encourage the free exchange of the economy among the different peoples and to lessen the chances of ethnic differences causing violence.

One must ask if the people of this nation (ethnic) are better off as a result of this conspiracy? Are the people of the steel mills better off? What about the automobile industry, the iron ore range of Minnesota, the copper mining and milling, agriculture, the lumber industry, the communications industry, the shoe industry, the clothing and cloth industry, etc.?

When and where did this "grand cycle" of revolutions to start the super central government for world economic and political control start? In searching for the genesis of the problem we find little developments throughout the Western Christian world that contributed but there was one incident, in one country, that put it together and started the process.

William the Conqueror in 1066. It was this man, the Duke of Normandy, who started the change of the system of Anglo Saxon England into the commercial giant of the world. So the first revolution of interest to us started with the conquest by war of England. However, the actual revolution itself was a commercial one and it took over 200 years to consummate.

Anglo-Saxon England prior to William was a nation of mostly free landholders. They owned their land in Alloidal Title. The greatest sources of information concerning the lifestyle of the early Anglo-Saxon were their deeds and wills, along with the records of the Christian churches. Their economic system was primarily based on agriculture with the typical farm town consisting of approximately 30 families. It was called the Tun. Each family would cultivate about one "hide" of land (about 120 Acres) and all of the families acreage would surround the tun. They rotated the crops and allowed for a 3 to 1 year fallow period program so they could rest the land. Although the timing was not perfect, they attempted to follow God's laws.

They traded with other parts of the world for commodities that they lacked. Each tun had artisans and craftsmen which provided the items used for trade.

The single most important feature was that they lived free. "Stand fast therefore in the liberty where with Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage" (Gal. 5:1). Their religious affiliation centered around the church in the town. The priest would be present in all meetings of the community and would be a part, along with the freemen and the Ealdorman, in the decisions of the community and nation.

The system of government was the court of hundred. One hundred freeholds would meet every four weeks to administer customary law and settle local pleas. This court was attended by all free men and was the most active and popular of Anglo-Saxon government. The largest division in the local government system was the shire, which was later called the county. The shire court met twice a year and was headed by the Ealdorman or Earl. The second royal office of the shire was the sire-reeve or sheriff.

The king presided over the nation with the help of the Witan, the council of the elder wise men. The Witan actually chose the king. The clergy acted as advisors in the system. The fyrd was the national army made up of the free-men of the various shires.

"So I took the chief of your tribes, wise men, and known, and made them heads over you, captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, and captains over fifties, and captains over tens, and officers among your tribes" (Deu 1:15).

It was a rugged life but because of that, they were robust and strong. They would fight for their family, their community, their nation and their God because their Christian faith lived with them on a constant basis. 2

When William the Conqueror invaded England, he confiscated all of the land owned by those freemen who fought against him. William immediately gave out that land to his own nobility and the system of feudal lordship was brought to England. The Allodial system of total ownership of land ended and was replaced by land held in fief. William, the King, really owned the land but he allowed the use of the land as long as they paid what amounted to a tax. Isn't that exactly what is being done today with the property tax? Don't pay it and you will see who owns the property.

When the feudal system was fully developed, the holders of the land by the feudal system promised to give military service to the king. The person holding the land in fief from the king could use and enjoy the land but didn't have complete ownership. Lawyers use the word usufruct to describe this arrangement. 3

"The poorest soldier of fortune found his part in the spoil. The meanest Norman rose to wealth and power in the new dominion of his duke. Great or small, however, each estate thus held from the Crown was held by its tenant on condition of military service at the royal call; and when the larger holdings were divided by their owners, as was commonly the case, into smaller sub-tenancies, the under-tenants were bound by the same conditions of service to their lord."

"Such a force, however, effective as it was against the conquered, was hardly less formidable to the Crown itself. William found himself fronted in his new realm by the feudal baronage whom he had so hardly subdued to his will in Normandy, nobles impatient of law, and aiming at an hereditary military and judicial power within their own manors independent of the King. The genius of the Conqueror is shown in his quick discernment of this danger and in the skill with which he met it. He availed himself of the old legal Anglo-Saxon constitution of the country to hold justice firmly in his own hands. He retained the local courts of the hundred and the shire, where every freeman had a place, while he subjected all to the jurisdiction of the King's court (emphasis mine-ed.)." Further, he used the old Anglo-Saxon national army, the fyrd, to help control the feudal system. 5

This arrangement of King William using the old Anglo-Saxon constitution only when he needed it is apparently the same situation we find ourselves in with respect to the use of Martial Law as was discussed in the first item in this issue. It can be termed, "Using the Constitution, only when it's needed." In this way they have destroyed the Constitution and returned us to serfs in a feudal system. And the fyrds, men who think they are free, can and have used to maintain the system.

The Money Lenders. This was all bad enough but William also brought the Jewish money lenders from France with him. An excellent account of this action is presented in the July 3, 1989 issue of the Hoskins Report. Mr. Hoskins shows from the Jewish Encyclopedia, "William of Malmesbury distinctly states that William the Conqueror brought the Jews from Rouen to England."

The Jewish money lenders loaned money to all of the Englishmen and William taxed the Jews very heavily on the gains they made from usury. Even so, the Jewish Encyclopedia reports, "As early as 1168...the value of the personal property of the Jews was regarded as one-fourth that of the whole country." 4

"His rigid exaction of feudal dues added wealth to the great Hoard at Winchester, which had been begun by the spoil of the conquered. But William found a more ready source of revenue in the settlement of the Jewish traders, who followed him from Normandy, and who were enabled by the royal protection to establish themselves in separate quarters or 'Jewries' of the chief towns of England...He was simply the King's chattel, and his life and goods were absolutely at the King's mercy..."

"A royal judiciary secured law to the Jewish merchant, who had no standing ground in the local courts; his bonds were deposited for safety in a chamber of the royal palace at Westminster, which from their Hebrew name of 'starrs' gained the title of the Star-Chamber." The famous Star-Chamber court system of England came from this arrangement.

"The Jew was the only capitalist in Europe, and, heavy as was the usury he exacted, his loans gave an impulse to industry such as England had never felt before. The century which followed the Conquest witnessed an outburst of architectural energy which covered the land with castles and cathedrals; but castle and cathedral alike owed their existence to the loans of the Jew." 5

This new-found "legal" system from Babylon caused England to flourish just as the ancient city of Babylon prospered. Those who accepted the system and worked within it became wealthy. It became a system of dual guilds.

The Merchant Guild controlled all of the trade within each town. Private capitalism and the local politics were inextricably mingled. Those with the money made the rules just as they do today. The merchants, who were the buyers and sellers of goods, wanted to hold the monopoly of all such activity within their town. They would stand together and obtained special privileges from the king. Thus, the "City of London" obtained the special privilege of being the center of all foreign financial exchanges. That special arrangement has remained in effect to this day.

Concurrently, the Craft Guilds came into being. Each craft specialty had its own guild. Men could not work in a craft until they became members of the guild. They developed a system of apprenticeship, wherein a man would work under a master craftsman. After his apprenticeship, usually seven years, he became a journeyman.

Members of each of these two guild systems were very proud of their work and they would accomplish community services such as aid to their guild brothers who were sick. They were active in civic affairs. They established fairs, at which they exchanged goods and ideas. The modern county fair is a direct result of this activity.

The Commercial Revolution. They became a country of commercial traders. Raw materials and finished goods was shipped and received to and from all of the major ports of the world. In the twelfth and thirteenth centuries most English exports, despite the improvement of England's shipping position, were sent out of England by foreign wholesale merchants who came over to England and bought and exported the goods they wanted. Z

The people of England did not approve of these international merchants and money barons and they protested bitterly to the king. Edward I, in 1290, was forced to order the departure of all Jews from England. All of the countries of Europe followed this action and by 1492, they had been removed from Europe.

The Knights Templar. However, this didn't stop the practice of usury and high international finance. The Jews started what is called "Joint Stock Companies." They employed Christians to act as their front men while they pulled the strings from behind. The organization that became the preeminent Joint Stock Company was the Knights Templar. Of course, this organization became a part of the Freemasonry movement. The other organization was the Rosicrucians, also a part of Freemasonry. They were active in the Venetian traders among the Italian Joint Stock Companies. Some of them came from Lombardy and hence they had their English operations on Lombard street in London.

"As the Templars had houses in all countries, they practised the financial operations of the international banks of our times; they were acquainted with letters of change, orders payable at sight, they instituted dividends and annuities on deposited capital, advanced funds, lent on credit, controlled private accounts, undertook to raise taxes for the lay and ecclesiastical siegneurs." 8

If we will search the records carefully, we should recognize that the vast predominance of bankers are either Masons or Jews. So when we start looking for the "devil" in this epic, we should include looking among the ancestors of our own people. God is no respecter of persons. A man cannot serve two masters. When one gives up God's principles and looks to mammon, judgment will eventually come upon him. This is true, not only on a personal basis, but on a national basis as well.

The Subjugation Of The Peasant. As the commercial revolution progressed, the division between the merchant class (capital) and labor (peasant) became critical. The famous caste system was developed and the concept was, that the peasant, generally the farmer, was of a lower class than the merchants and money lenders. The central government declared that taxes would be administered such that the poorer farmer and laborer would be given a lower tax than the merchant and capitalist. However, it didn't turn out that way. The merchants and capitalists were given the preferential treatment and the farmers and middle class carried the bulk of the taxes. Does this sound familiar?

The dissatisfaction and unrest grew steadily worse until the great bubonic plague occurred in the middle of the 14th century. The manufacture and merchandizing of goods dropped to a fraction of the earlier effort. About one-half of the population died because of the plague. There weren't enough farmers to harvest the crops. The craft guilds weren't able to work. As a result, the costs of all of the necessities of life skyrocketed.

What did the government do? They passed the Statute of Laborers law wherein they tried to force all workers back to work at the rate of pay that existed before the plague and permit the prices of goods to remain at the high level. In addition, in 1377, a poll tax was levied on properties and incomes to include the poor. Two years later, another poll tax and in 1380 another one. False tax returns on a large scale resulted. The tax collectors were sent out to force the collection of the tax. That did it!

Peasants Revolt. The revolt started with an attack on the tax commissioner. Within two months, the entire country was enveloped in a full scale revolt with much bloodshed. The king promised reforms when he was personally confronted by those in revolt, generally the old freemen of Anglo-Saxon England. But the king reneged and crushed the revolt with military force. The taxes remained and the Statutes of Laborers remained. 9

The Industrial Revolution. The Commercial Revolution continued to grow. The government built an extensive Merchant Marine to haul the merchandisers' goods, all on borrowed money, of course. Because of pirate ships attacking the Merchant Marine and because of England's new-found pre-eminence in merchandising, the government started the Royal Navy for protection. During all of this development of international commercialism, the common Englishman abhorred the concept of usury, because of his Christian heritage. Even though they protested enough to cause King Edward I to expel the Jews from England, it didn't stop. Those manipulating the government of England with Joint Stock Companies cared nothing about the will of the people. It was identical to the conditions in Rome in the first two centuries after the crucifixion of Christ.

It was during the end of the reign of Queen Elizabeth I that the Commercial Revolution moved into the famous Industrial Revolution of England. The feudal period ended because the large capital interests proved that wars would now be won by those with the largest purse. This meant borrowed money. Thomas Mun, in his book England's Treasure by Foreign Trade, stated, "To sell more to strangers yearly than we consume of theirs in value is the object of mercantilism."

To sell more meant to build more. So the system of investing huge amounts of foreign capital into production plants began. Large installations of sugar, copper, aluminum, steel, paper, gun powder, cannon, and other types of processing plants were constructed. The mining of coal for fuel became a major industry.

This sounds like a perfect utopia for the worker. But it wasn't. The peasant class was still the peasant class. Capitalist-owned mines and manufacturing establishments marked the beginning of changes in industrial technique and of the concentration of capital in industry. "These developments in industry and commerce produced during the later years of Elizabeth's reign a remarkable period of prosperity. Prices were high, but money was plentiful. The old prejudice against interest gave way, and banking and commercial lending became important factors in business. Commercial and industrial enterprises organized on a comparatively large capitalistic scale became common. The rapid growing wealth was distributed inequitably. Wages still advanced so much more slowly than prices that the ordinary laborer had small share in the general good fortune." 10

The Craft Guilds lost out in as the Industrial Revolution came into full swing. A manufacturing plant didn't need system of Craft Guilds to produce their product.

It was these conditions that led to the slums and the sweat shops. The worker remained uneducated. It was all because of international capitalism. There was no "free enterprise" about it. Also, a big share of these people were descendents of the Anglo-Saxon freemen of King Alfred the great and of the Welsh Kings Caratoc and Arviragus, who, as Christians, fought the Roman Legions to a standoff in A.D.45.

They did not forget. When it came time for the great manipulators to create the revolution under Oliver Cromwell, they were ready for something. They had been manipulated for centuries and there was no change at the time of the Cromwells. They thought that they were doing the right thing when they participated in the Cromwell revolution. But, as usual, they didn't really know what the fight was about.

With the elimination of the importance of the Craft Guilds, the artisans, including the masons, were disenchanted with the system that the plutocrats developed. Undoubtedly, this had a great influence on them when the Rosicrucians came to them in the 1600's and convinced them that the solution to their problems was to create the secret Freemasonry movement.

What is the lesson to be learned from this history of our people? When we try to improve the condition of mankind by creating organizations that try to do it in the name of man rather than in the name of God, we are destined to fail. That includes Labor Unions, Service Clubs, Secret Societies and even Christian churches which have a simbiotic relationship with the government and preach the government approved doctrine. The great story of the Word of God is that we cannot do it without Him. "We ought to obey God rather than men." (Acts 5:29)

It is true that the man-made system now appears to be in control. They believe that they are so much in control that they have now become arrogant and even brag about their exploits. Judges now take "judicial notice" of matters they don't want to consider. Judicial notice means, in effect, "Don't confuse me with facts, my mind is already made up." True Christian patriots cannot get a forum or platform in public debates. The terms, "extremists", "radicals", "right-wingers" and even "neo-Nazi" are used in the controlled media. The term "proscribe" can be used to represent the system being used by those who think they are in control. Proscribe come from the old Roman Empire and means: "To publish the name of a person condemned to death or banishment. To deprive of the protection of the law; to outlaw. To denounce; to forbid; to interdict."

No, they are not in control. God is in control. When His people have had enough and, "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land." (2 Chr 7:14)

Modern preachers like to use just a little part of Ecclesiastes, chapter 3, when they give a burial sermon. But they don't use the rest of what God gave us for directions.

"To everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven; A time to be born, and a time to die; a time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted;

A time to kill, and a time to heal; a time to break down, and a time to build up; A time to weep, and a time to laugh; a time to mourn, and a time to dance;

A time to cast away stones, and a time to gather stones together; a time to embrace, and a time to refrain from embracing; A time to get, and a time to lose; a time to keep, and a time to cast away;

A time to rend, and a time to sew, a time to keep silence, and a time to speak; A time to love, and a time to hate; a time of war, and a time of peace...

That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past." (Ecl 3:1-8,15)
