- Power Point Presentation: Seventeen Below: Oregon Counties and the Pre-Recession Peak
- Nineteen counties were above their pre-recession employment peak in May 2017, leaving seventeen counties still below. Most counties in Northwest Oregon are above their pre-recession peak. Counties well above their previous highs are in areas around noted population centers such as Portland, Salem, Corvallis, and Bend. Unemployment rates have fallen below pre-recession lows, at some point recently, for 35 of Oregon's 36 counties and they are currently low compared to historical trends. Crook is the only county to have not fallen below their pre-recession low. Crook County's May rate however, tied the county's pre-recession low. Low unemployment rates suggest that people who are looking for work are finding work. Although many counties have not returned to prerecession peak employment levels, many of these continue the trend of closing in on peak. While return to pre-recession peak employment may be a good benchmark of economic recovery for many counties, population and demographic shifts, along with length of time since the Great Recession suggest that this may not be a good benchmark for certain counties such as Grant and Harney.

Youth to Manufacturing, Forrest Smith

- Mr. Smith spoke to the Board about how he believed that promoting employment through videos is fantastic for several reasons. First, videos can be easily shared and seen by a large audience overtime. Second, the people who we are targeting with these videos, are more likely to engage through a web based forum (because we all know how much young people love to communicate online). Finally, videos can be very effective because they have the potential to be highly persuasive.
- The videos he presented were made to be highly informative and teach viewers how a high school education prepares them for entry level jobs, and how those jobs can lead to a great career. These videos are also somewhat entertaining and therefore, they make the jobs look fun and desirable.
- In conclusion, Mr. Smith stated he benefited from being part of the Board's discussion and is confident that they are satisfied with the progress on the videos to this point.
