Proper Understanding of Certain Roles of Faithful Laypeople

There is a danger in “too-indiscriminate use of the word ministry”, and the risk it brings of confusion about the right relation between the common priesthood of all Christ’s faithful and the ministerial priesthood. In the pastoral context this calls for prudent and responsible use of language. At the same time, this is not to call into doubt the positive prescriptions of the Church regarding the participation of lay Catholics in the mission of Christ and his Church or the selfless dedication of countless faithful throughout the worldwide Church, in the United States of America and in the Archdiocese of Portland in Oregon.

The lay faithful called to give assistance at liturgical celebrations should be well instructed and must be those whose Christian life, morals and fidelity to the Church’s Magisterium recommend them. It is fitting that such a person should have received a liturgical formation in accordance with his or her age, condition, state of life, and religious culture.

Care should be taken to avoid obscuring the complementary relationship between the action of priests and deacons and that of laypersons, in such a way that the service of laypersons undergoes what might be called a certain “clericalization”, while the sacred ministers inappropriately assume those things that are proper to the life and activity of the lay faithful.

For any kind of deputation or commissioning of laypersons among the faithful to various roles recognized by the Church, particular norms have been established appropriate to the different cases. For all cases, however, as for the ordained ministry, requisites of sensitivity to the Gospel and basic good sense apply and they include the principle that no office or function is to be bestowed for the purpose of doing honor to a private person or out of human respect. Nor should anyone be selected whose designation could cause consternation for the faithful.

With the exception of instituted acolytes and lectors, whose case is governed by general law, and of extraordinary ministers of Holy Communion, who in the Archdiocese of Portland in Oregon are normally deputed by the Archbishop for a fixed period of time, other altar servers, readers, sacristans, musicians, and ushers, musicians, singers, and choir members whose service is not otherwise regulated by a contract of remuneration may usefully be appointed for a fixed term that is renewable.
