

Indy-based production company airs 'Feats of Valor'

By: Anna Turner

NUVO Editorial Staff

Run date: 20 May 2009

With flashy checkered flags and weekend-long store sales monopolizing our minds, it is easy to forget why Memorial Day exists. Creative Street Entertainment, an Indianapolis-based production company, reminds us with their newest documentary Feats of Valor, a 60-minute film exploring the military service of three Medal of Honor recipients.

Feats of Valor documents the trials and triumphs of Sammy Davis in the Vietnam War, Ted Rubin in the Korean War and Woody Williams in Iwo Jima during World War II. All three were awarded the Medal of Honor for their displays of bravery in the face of war.

The documentary will air on Monday, May 25, 10 p.m. ET on The Military Channel. According to a press release, Peter Rees, executive producer for the Military Channel, believes that Feats of Valor lives up to the network's standard of accuracy and excitement.

"With Feats of Valor, we believe our team, along with Creative Street Entertainment, has taken battlefield story-telling to a new level of impact."

Mark Nisenbaum, Director of Television Development at Creative Street Entertainment, served as Supervising Producer for Feats of Valor. He explains that Creative Street used recreations, or professional actors trained to reenact historic events, to enhance the documentary's realism.

"This really dramatized the battles," Nisenbaum says. "We think that those recreations give viewers an exciting and very personal, immersive experience."

All materials copyright and exclusively owned by Anna
Turner and Snobster Media LLC.

Our Media is Better Than Your Media.