- ⁷ Gov. Cuomo issued Order No. 181, “Restoring the Right to Vote for New Yorkers on Parole,” on April 18, 2018. The order establishes a path by which the voting rights of some parolees will be restored. Over time the number of parolees who cannot vote will certainly diminish, although it is not yet clear how many parolees will ultimately be enfranchised or at what pace. <https://www.governor.ny.gov/news/no181-restoring-right-vote-new-yorkers-parole>

⁴¹ It appears that probation and parole are combined in Delaware in the Bureau of Community Corrections of the Department of Corrections (<http://doc.delaware.gov/BOCC/index.shtml>). The combined number of persons on probation and parole is reported here. http://doc.delaware.gov/downloads/DOC_2016AnnualReport.pdf, p. 30
