This study seeks to consider and analyze the U.S. Presidential Elections of November 6, 2012 in light of the Mormon Plan for American by way of the 'White Horse Prophecy'. The study will also present a generalized background of the Mormon religion with several of its key trends and stats for context. The Mormon Plan for America is basically a 'rescue' plan to take over the USA; religiously through the political process if necessary. To many Mormons, a strong association or link of the White Horse Mormon Prophecy for America to Mitt Romney was established during the first decisive Presidential Debate. Romney referenced a 'moral' obligation and he referenced the US Constitution in the background. During the first Debate between Obama and Romney, the message and reference to the U.S. Constitution by Romney was the 'prophetic utterance' many Mormons in particularly were looking and/or hoping for.

This Presidential Election, to the Mormons, is being believed by many of that 'faith' to be the time and place for their 'Man'. They are holding out that Romney will be the fulfillment of their long awaited White Horse Prophet that will be the 'One Mighty and Strong' to deliver the USA from certain moral decay and economic doom. The prophecy declares that one day, a Mormon would become President of the United States, for the exact purpose of rescuing the USA through its government and overseen by the Mormon Church. Not since President Kennedy and Carter has the U.S. population had to wrangle with the overtones of the candidate's religious beliefs for the U.S. Presidency as with Obama and now Romney. For Obama it is whether he is, was or is even now a crypto-Muslim; for Romney, it is with his Mormonism. This religious variable for the election of the next U.S. President has surfaced again. The question many U.S. Voters are asking and/or thinking is how the candidate's religion will possibly play out in the direction of the nation's policy, both foreign and domestic.

In the 1960s, people were concerned and even alarmed that a Catholic U.S. President, Kennedy would have the Roman Catholic Pope dictating policy from the Vatican. In the mid-70s, Jimmy Carter's affirmation that he was a 'Born-Again' Christian made a lot of people around the nation nervous and questioned whether his religious convictions would overrule existing policies and legislation. To some extent the 'nerves' of many in the USA that ascribed to the notion of separation of Church and State were put at ease as both Kennedy and Carter reiterated that their religious convictions would not come between their personal convictions and that of the U.S. Presidency. Also, most in the USA had some understanding and familiarity with what Roman Catholicism was about, whether good or bad as well as what 'Born-Again' Christians stood for.

Religious Politics

What is different now is that this current U.S. Election, on the other hand, has 2 candidates whose religion is not the main-stream religion of the USA. Most Americans are unfamiliar with the tenants of their respective religions; Islam and Mormonism. For the purpose of this study, it will be assumed that Obama's religion is really Islam. For Obama, we can see the fruit of his 'religion' in his foreign policy toward the Middle East as it has come to its intended fruition. Obama's foreign policy is pro-Arabs and Muslim; his administration does not even recognize Jerusalem as the unified capital of Israel. Mitt Romney, on the other hand is portraying a man of conviction based on a religion that echoes with the sentiments of main-line Christianity in the USA. In this respect alone, Romney will have an upper hand in comparison with those that consider themselves 'religious' in the USA.

The mainline Protestants welcome this familiar rhetoric and vocabulary but with some concern. Others are considering this 2 party choice of either or as a 'lesser of 2 evils'. On the surface, Romney's Mormonism is resonating more with this conservative segments of the US population that have been alarmed at the policies of Obama over the last 4 years in Office. To many in the mainline Protestant majority of the USA, Obama is increasingly seen as being a threat to the U.S. Constitution and citizen's civil liberties. Like most religions, Mormon eschatology demands a 'messiah' that will deliver the 'faithful' for their devotion and works. This 'messiah' or prophet, much like the Muslims, will establish a New Order or 'kingdom' on Earth. Mormons are supposed to be destined to be rulers over all other nations but especially the USA in the 'latter days'.

The "White Horse Prophecy"

This coming New Order, as it could possibly correlate to the Mormon Doctrine and White Horse Prophecy is that somehow America will be involved in the 'latter days' to bring this about –perhaps even through a US Presidential Election. This prophecy is a Mormon prediction taken very literally by the followers of the Mormon Church. It is referred to as the White Horse Prophecy alluding to the 1st Seal of the Book of Revelation. From this scene, a Man on a White Horse comes onto the world stage in time to save it from total collapse in every sense of the word; economic, political and spiritual. This 'One Mighty and Strong' Man, as the Mormon call their coming 'messiah' has to be and will be a 'prophet.' This man will be in the line of succession of 'crowned prophets' since Joseph Smith was one before his death.

Mormon historical accounts declare that Joseph Smith crowned himself 'king of America' during the time of persecution against the Mormons. The opposition to their version of Christianity is what has been an issue of contention, particularly in the USA, between the Mormons and mainline Christianity—whom the Mormons view as apostate and needing to be evangelized with the 'true gospel'. Many do not realize that bedded deep inside the psyche of the Mormon Doctrines is also a sense of revenge needed to be taken against mainline Christianity for the murder of their 'prophet', Joseph Smith. Many in the Mormon Church as increasingly coming to the realization that perhaps Romney could be this 'anointed prophet' come and save America and the US Constitution.

The Mormons

Mitt Romney is not only a Mormon Elder but a Bishop that is a High Priest in the Mormon Church priesthood hierarchy. This alone makes him qualified for the prophecy. In terms of credentials, Romney served his missionary tour in France. His great grandfather was born in Mexico. He lived there in an established Mormon colony, as there are many Mormon and Mennonite religious communities there to this day. In brief, a Mormon is used to describe a member of the church that is called officially, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints. This religion is also often times referred to as the simply, LDS. This religion claims to have the 'true revelation' of Jesus Christ given to their founder precisely in the USA. This compilation of writings form the main body of literary work that comprises the Book of Mormon; a 3rd Testament.

Mormons believe that mainline Christianity is apostate and thus considers any non-Mormon as candidates for their proselytizing efforts. A common example of this effort to convert Christians in particular can be seen in Romney's Mormon missionary tour in France. He spent the time required by all male eligible 'Elders' to do missions. During the Vietnam War, Romney was a Mormon missionary on a quest to convert Christians to the 'true religion' of Jesus Christ. Unlike the main Abrahamic faiths of Judaism and Christianity, Mormonism is uniquely an American or U.S. phenomenon. Of note, within the Mormon Church, there has been a schism that occurred much like it occurred between the Roman Catholics and Protestant Reformed Catholics.

There are actually 3 main branches; the most prolific and successful has been the LDS. The other 2 are the Reformed and the Temple Lot Mormons. On the surface Mormonism might appear to be 'Christian' but as one further investigates and compares doctrine and practice, there is clearly a distinct difference. There are many peculiar religious tenants of the Mormon faith that are at odds with the main principles and practices of orthodox Christianity. Some of these peculiar Mormon practices are, for example: baptizing the dead, being sealed, views of race, attributes of who God is, the divinity of Adam, blood atonement, etc.

Some Mormon Church Stats

- over 13 million members worldwide
- over 51,000 missionaries around the world
- religious material printed in 166 different languages

The Romney Campaign Logo

This logo illustration is only conjecture. This illustration is not to conclude that the Romney Campaign is or has anything to do with an 'Anti-Christ' association. This illustration only seeks to show, that like the Obama campaign logo introduced in 2008 that many have deciphered a 666 number into it, so too perhaps the Romney Campaign logo has such a number association incorporated into its logo as well. Specifically the digits have been incorporated in many well-known logos and/or symbols around the world. Many powerful world corporations, agencies and organizations have a variation of this number associated with their products or ideology.

Perhaps this same principle is now being used in the Romney Presidential Campaign logo; if by coincidence or by choice. The Romney logo has a tri-color font that has a red, white and blue triple 'R' without a left edge. The 666 configuration can be figured by basically flipping the logo horizontally. With this orientation, then the upside-down R's make for the three 6s. The number 666 has a sinister connotation in many world cultures since ancient times. Many world religious and denominations do attribute evil forces to it. The number sequence has primarily been associated to the concept of the 'Anti-Christ.' It is a force and person that opposes what the concept or ideal of the 'Christ' represents, according to some religious interpretations.

In Mathematics

For example:  $(1 + 2 + 3 + \dots + 34 + 35 + 36 = 666)$

and thus it is a triangular number.

The sine of the angle  $666^\circ$  multiplied by -2 is equal to the golden ratio:

$-2 \sin 666^\circ = 2 \sin 54^\circ = 2 \cos 36^\circ = \phi = 1 + \sqrt{5}/2 = 1.62\dots$

The U.S. Constitution

According to the beliefs of the Mormons, the U.S. Constitution is on the same par as the Bible and the Book of Mormon. They believe that it is divinely inspired to the point that any attack or attempt to destroy it is an attack on Mormonism itself. Since most Mormons subscribe to this interpretation and association, Mormons believe that prophetically, it is incumbent upon the Mormon Church to 'save' the USA in order to save the U.S. Constitution. Mormons believe that their 'god' will raise-up a man from the Mormon Church in the USA to lead this charge and fulfill the 'White Horse Prophecy.' The rationale for this conjecture is that Mormons believe that one of their Elders and Priests would be this man that will save the USA from political, moral and economic doom. A possible sign that this Mormon Prophecy is about to be realized could be through the U.S. Presidential elections of 2012.

This is not the first time that the US Presidential candidate would be a Mormon. Ironically Romney's father ran for US President in the 1960s but did not win. What is different now, in comparison to then, is that the USA is going through a time when the US Constitution is in jeopardy of being discarded or destroyed. It is now being done through such legislation and Executive Orders by Obama that have extended the Patriot Act and he has authorized the NDAA by Obama, etc. Most students of Political Science, regardless of political affiliations could agree that the USA has never been so divided between the Blue and the Red and on a verge on going over an economic, moral and political precipice. The USA currently is much like it was during Lincoln with the Blue and the Grey. The popular notion is that the USA is divided by the Blue and the Red only; it does not include any 3rd Party or Candidate at all.

America has been conditioned to only 'vote' for 1 of 2 options for the Presidency -Romney or Obama. Is there really any difference to both of them? Some political pundits have presented evidence by following the money trail of those that have contributed financially. Not surprisingly, both Candidates are really not that far apart when it comes to who is funding them and who they really represent and will work for. There might be market economic differences on the outset but at the very top, both candidates can be seen as just been a different version of the 'same'. Others go so far as to entertain the notion that any candidate is really not 'chosen' by the U.S. Electorate but that they are chosen from behind the scenes by a sinister 'invisible dark hand' that only gives the US population an appearance that it 'elects' the most powerful 'man' on Earth, the President of the USA.

Nonetheless, we may well be witnessing the unfolding of this Mormon Prophecy come to pass before our very eyes. If true, then Romney will be 'divinely' elected as the next President of the USA and perhaps be its last. In terms of the validity of the Mormon White Horse Prophecy, both variables are now in place; there is a Mormon running for President and the U.S. Constitution is in peril. Perhaps Romney is indeed in a position to have this Mormon Prophecy come to true. IF this is to be the case, then our current days will be the 'latter days' of the Mormons that will rule America –as planned.
