SYNOPSIS for Episode 3

N.A.NOW, an acronym for NATIVE AWARENESS NOW, is a high production value, 30 minute talk show made for Television. N.A.NOW 's format and subject matter deals with issues facing Native Americans. Whether on the Reservation, in the big city, in mainstream business or in any walk of modern life, the Native American of today faces unique issues and challenges. N.A.NOW is hosted by Jonathan Joss, Directed by Irene Bedard.

EPISODE 3. Episode 3 has guests Graywolf and Tim Harjo, as well as an animated sketch segment by Native American artist Steven Paul Judd.

Graywolf is Director of the Southern California Chapter of A.I.M. He is also curator and guide at the Chumash Indian Museum in Thousand Oaks, California, as well as the lead guitarist of the acclaimed music group, The Graywolf Blues Band. Graywolf is a unique figure in the Native American community of Southern California and well beyond. Through his role in A.I.M., his place at the museum in preserving and educating the public about the Chumash people, and his musical endeavors, Graywolf is able to help the Native community in substantial, permanent and profound ways. A benefit concert for those living in poverty on the Lakota Plains Reservation, for example, to ensure that no one there goes without heat in the winter. Graywolf and fellow Museum curator Alfred Panther, through the use of Ravens magical TeePee, take us on a tour of the wonders of the Chumash Indian Museum and its land, part of an ancient Chumash village.

Tim Harjo is founder and C.E.O. of the company NativeFlix. NativeFlix, as the name suggests, is a company that specializes in streaming Native American and Indigenous themed films, Television shows and content. Tim and his company are interested in any and all productions, old and new, that reflect the Native condition and convey the culture in an accurate and entertaining way, thereby bringing the indigenous voice to movies and productions. He reviews all material submitted and even aids in new productions, thus bringing Native awareness to the public. Tim is also a well educated lawyer, a plains Apache from Oklahoma and a direct descendant of Chief Geronimo.
