

Justice with Compassion

Casa Cornelia Law Center
2016 Annual Report

Justice with Compassion

CASA CORNELIA'S MISSION AND SPIRIT are rooted in the tradition of service of the Society of the Holy Child Jesus which founded and sponsored the law center in 1993 to provide free legal services to indigent victims of human and civil rights violations.

Although U.S. immigration laws and policy offer safe haven for persons in perilous circumstances, eligibility for protection under the law is no guarantee of securing protection. Victims unfamiliar with the laws, the language and culture rarely navigate the intricacies of the legal system successfully without the assistance of an attorney. Indigent persons fleeing persecution in their homelands, abused women, abandoned children and victims of human trafficking are especially vulnerable.

Casa Cornelia Law Center

2760 Fifth Avenue, Suite 200, San Diego, CA 92103-6330 ☎ 619-231-7788

Dear Friends,

You have made it possible for so many to experience our mission of justice with compassion. In 2016, Casa Cornelia provided critical information, legal services, and access to hope to 2,414 men, women and children fleeing violence and seeking safe haven in the United States. Your generous support made this a reality. The needs of the most vulnerable continue to grow, and 2016's numbers indicate we exceeded the total numbers from previous years. Specifically, we responded to:

- ◇ 610 asylum seekers fleeing persecution and torture
- ◇ 557 survivors of serious crimes, including domestic violence and human trafficking
- ◇ 999 children fleeing violence, abuse or abandonment
- ◇ 248 individuals seeking other forms of humanitarian protection and relief, including DACA (Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals)

We could not provide a bridge to humanitarian protection to those we serve without our volunteers, who exponentially increase our impact. In 2016, 542 dedicated volunteers, including attorneys from the private bar, interpreters, translators, students and others, donated an astonishing 18,951 hours of their time to help Casa Cornelia's clients.

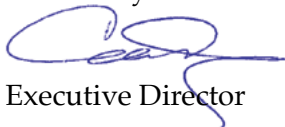

This year we expect the need for our services to increase as more individuals seek our help.

Given the current policy landscape, which has shifted dramatically, Casa Cornelia's staff and volunteers have mobilized swiftly to answer phone calls from terrified clients and accelerate our intake, screening, and case acceptance processes for new clients. Mothers who are victims of crime fear deportation and worry about the future of their children. Victims of persecution and torture are unsure what their futures hold. Children who are alone enter legal screenings with wide eyes and uncertainty in their hearts. Our staff has dedicated themselves to ensuring these needs are met, that our clients receive necessary information, and that we put our commitment to education into action by sharing our legal expertise with the community at large.

We thank you for your support in 2016 and for your continued support in 2017. We truly could not do this good work without you.

With every best wish and prayer, I am

Asylum Seekers Fleeing Persecution

In 2016, Casa Cornelia Law Center’s oldest legal service program continued to provide legal representation to individuals, detained and non-detained, who were eligible for asylum due to political, religious, ethnic, and gender-based persecution (among other reasons) or torture in their country of origin, and who could not afford counsel. Casa Cornelia remains the largest local provider of pro bono legal services to asylum seekers in need of this life-saving relief. In 2016, of the 610 asylum seekers (561 in 2015), 101 were victims of torture. 153 persons were detained in a maximum-security detention center at Otay Mesa near the Mexican border in San Diego County and 457 were non-detained. Most asylum seekers ranged in age from twenty-six to thirty-five years. All written requests for assistance were reviewed by an attorney, and approximately 50% of those who applied were interviewed personally by a staff attorney.

Hundreds of those who presented themselves at the San Ysidro Port of Entry in 2016 sought our assistance either personally or through our partner agencies. We observed greater numbers of women and children seeking asylum than in previous years. Additionally, we marked a steady stream of LGBTI asylum seekers from Central America and Africa who fled persecution. Large numbers of Haitian and Cuban nationals were paroled into the U.S. pending removal proceedings; Casa Cornelia served forty-seven Haitian nationals. Nations represented on Casa Cornelia’s case lists numbered fifty-one and included El Salvador, Eritrea, Guatemala, Honduras, Iraq, Mexico, Nigeria, Pakistan, Republic of Congo, Somalia and Venezuela.

Asylum for Flora

Flora*, a transgender woman from Mexico, faced lifelong physical, emotional, and psychological harm based on her sexual identification in Mexico. Flora's abuse began as a child, and she encountered similar treatment at the hands of the Mexican police, gangs, and employers who discriminated against her. Flora fled Mexico and sought asylum in the U.S. after realizing her situation would not improve there. After coming to the U.S., Flora was detained at the Otay Mesa Detention Center in San Diego. With representation from Casa Cornelia, Flora was granted asylum in the U.S., ensuring safe haven.

Abused and Abandoned Children

Amongst all those who seek our assistance, the most vulnerable are young children who are either alone in the U.S., are dependent upon adult survivors of crime and persecution, are part of a family in flight, or are special-needs clients. Our Children’s Program works to assist vulnerable child arrivals in need of legal assistance in San Diego and has grown to meet the increasing demand of minors arriving in the U.S. fleeing extreme violence, abandonment, or abuse; seeking reunification with parents; or seeking work to support their families. Casa Cornelia remains the only provider of legal services for detained and locally released unaccompanied children in the San Diego area. The increased number of child arrivals in 2014, 2015, and 2016 marked a ‘new normal’ for our Children’s Program. The types of relief available to youth at risk are little known to the community and we share our expertise in this area of law with the community at large and with other agency, government and court stakeholders.

In 2016, the Children’s Program succeeded in screening all detained unaccompanied children for eligibility for legal relief, and responded to all inquiries for legal services by non-detained children. Priority was given to children who were at increased risk (very young children who reported past abuse, children with indicia of trafficking) or were aging out. Of the 999 children we assisted, 746 were detained and 253 were non-detained; each of the detained children received a Know Your Rights (KYR) presentation. 817 children received legal screenings from an attorney. The legal team conducted 218 intakes from non-detained children and accepted 127 new cases for full representation. Thirty-five cases for non-detained children were resolved over the course of the year.

Javier and Mariela Flee a Blood Feud

Javier*, a fourteen-year old boy from Central America, and his twelve-year-old sister Mariela* fled their home eighteen months ago to reunite with their mother in the U.S. When the children were just infants, a blood feud began against their family. A powerful criminal organization began by killing their grandfather, then several uncles and many of their cousins. The children grew up in hiding, but once they reached adolescence the criminal organization began looking for them as well. Represented by Casa Cornelia staff, Javier and Mariela applied for asylum and were granted asylee status in November, 2016.

Victims of Domestic Violence and Human Trafficking

Although the unique nature of each person's situation makes each case different in terms of timing, purpose and measurable results, the Program's collective milestones have included the following: Throughout 2016, the Victims of Crime (VOC) Program provided assistance to 557 individuals, 199 of which were new requests for assistance. The Program conducted 214 pre-screenings, 177 legal screenings and accepted 101 new cases for representation. In that time, new applications for work permits were submitted, while seventeen previously pending work permits were granted. This important document enables clients to work and provide for themselves and their children. Further, thirty-nine U Visa applications, six T Visa applications and nine VAWA applications were submitted. At the same time, thirty-three previously pending applications were granted. The majority were women, with over half ranging in age from twenty-five to forty-five years. However, we are seeing more male survivors of domestic violence and other serious crimes. Children who witness violence in the home are also at risk and benefit from our services.

New funding by the California Department of Social Services (CDSS) allowed Casa Cornelia to screen for more types of legal relief and to work within a larger network for referrals. As a result, 248 individuals received our assistance in Deferred Action for Childhood

Arrivals (DACA) and Deferred Action for Parents of Americans and Lawful Permanent Residents (DAPA).

Casa Cornelia effectively put clients first, and provided quality, pro bono services which helps ensure safety and protection from violence and crime. The subsequent power and regained self-respect earned through the work permit always transforms the individuals we serve into survivors.

Marta and Her Children Find Safety

Marta* is a native of Mexico but was brought to the U.S. when she was just five months old. As an adult she became a victim of domestic violence. She and her U.S. citizen abuser were married for eight years and had three children in common. He was often physically and mentally abusive towards her. Additionally, he constantly used his citizen status to manipulate her. On one occasion, Marta caught him being unfaithful when another woman was calling him. He became angry and began choking her. As she was being choked, her roommate called the police who had to physically pull her abuser off her. Marta has since self-petitioned for VAWA with the help of Volunteer Attorneys James Erselius and Camille Bacon-Schulte of Latham & Watkins LLP. Her petition was approved and she will be able to adjust to legal permanent residence in the future. For now, she can work legally in the U.S. to support herself and her children.

Escape from Trafficking

Stella*, a hair stylist from Western Africa, was trafficked to a Latin American country by a woman named Dorothy. Stella initially trusted Dorothy as a mother figure, close friend, and confidant. Dorothy promised Stella that she could make more money and help her family out of poverty if she moved to Latin America and worked as a hair stylist there. Because of all that Stella had gone through with her family, she felt Dorothy was God sent, and trusted her. Once Stella arrived however, she was forced into sex trafficking. When she refused, she was brutally assaulted by her trafficker, and physically and sexually assaulted by men hired to abuse her. Stella was able to escape almost a year later. After coming to the U.S., Stella was detained at the Otay Mesa Detention Center in San Diego. There, Casa Cornelia took her case. Volunteer Attorney Katherine Nichols, from Duane Morris LLP, helped her secure protection. She now enjoys living in freedom and safety.

2016 In A Nutshell

Accommodating its delivery of services to changes in conditions in other parts of the world, as well as to the legal and funding environment in which it found itself, Casa Cornelia responded to requests for legal assistance from 2,414 men, women and children. Through our legal support, advice, referrals, and direct representation, indigent immigrants received timely and quality assistance

- ◇ 2012: 1,215 persons
- ◇ 2013: 1,310 persons
- ◇ 2014: 1,849 persons
- ◇ 2015: 1,991 persons
- ◇ 2016: 2,414 persons

Along wait is over: Volunteer Attorney Flor de Maria Levandoski tells client that asylum has been granted. Life can begin again.

Casa Cornelia's direct legal services are the largest part of our mission; however, embedded within our mission is our commitment to educating the community at large regarding immigration law and policy and the plight of vulnerable immigrants.

The expansion and responsiveness of the services provided by the law center, and thereby the increased impact on the community, have been made possible through the work of the Pro Bono Program which continues to recruit, train, assign cases, mentor, and supervise Volunteer Attorneys from the private bar as well as interpreters and law student volunteers. In 2016, contributions from volunteers were valued at over $496,000.

Indeed, none of this work would be possible without the collective strength of our supporters and volunteers. Our clients' lives are transformed through your material and moral support, and Casa Cornelia is privileged to share transformative client stories for each program as illustration.
