

History of the Georgia Chapter

In December of 1934, United States Attorney General Homer S. Cummings convened in Washington D.C., a National Crime Conference. The National Crime Conference raised the issue of police professionalism and specifically targeted small police departments for increased training in order to meet the threat posed by the crime problem of that day. A suggestion coming out of this conference was that a structure be developed that would deal with all aspects of crime, a sort of focal point for the dissemination of information and a nerve center from which could flow, to all parts of the country, crime prevention and law enforcement techniques of value in eliminating crime.

Mr. J. Edgar Hoover created the National Academy in response to this conference. Director Hoover said in 1934, “The school’s principle objective is to raise the level of police professionalism nationwide by training local police officers”. On July 29th, 1935, just seven months after the Attorney General’s conference, the FBI’s National Academy program started when Special Agent Hugh H. Clegg greeted a class of eager police officers for the 1st Session of what was then called, the FBI National Police Training School. The National Academy classes were held in the Department of Justice building in Washington D.C.

Mr. Hoover promised Americans that the FBI National Academy would be responsive to its changing needs and would raise the profession of law enforcement by training police officers who, in turn, could train members of their own departments.

On May 2, 1972, Mr. Hoover passed away. He never saw the National Academy students walk the halls of the current FBI Academy in Quantico, Virginia. The 90th Session of the National Academy would be the first to attend Quantico just a month after the Director’s death.

Four times a year over 250 law enforcement officers from around the world, including 7 to 8 from Georgia, are joined together in the halls of the FBI Academy at Quantico. The National Academy continues to be the flagship of professional law enforcement education and career development as it has for 67 years.

The 10-weeks of training covers five core areas: Constitutional Law, Behavioral Sciences, Administration, Criminal Investigation, and Physical Fitness. Primarily, FBI Agents holding advanced degrees teach the classes in the NA program. Furthermore, the classes are accredited with the University of Virginia. Today, there are more than 34,000 National Academy graduates from around the world. When you graduate from the National Academy, your association with the NA doesn’t end. Each state has its own Association to continue the training and networking that started in Quantico.

The Georgia Chapter was first organized October 16, 1946. FBI SAC Edwin J. Foltz called the first meeting to order. The meeting was held at the Dempsey Hotel in Macon with a barbeque that followed at Snow's Lodge. At this meeting a constitution was drafted and the officers were elected for the "Georgia National Academy Associates".

The conference coordinators were Ryan Morgan (Lawrenceville P.D.) and Jeff Adcock (Cobb County P.D.) and they both did an exceptional job that all chapter members can be proud of. The coordinators and board members wore tan polo GA NAA shirts to be easily identified so if anyone had questions it was easy to find a board member or coordinator for help.
