

Whole Home Remodeling Tips for Getting the Most Out of Small Living Spaces

KBD Blog / January 11, 2018

Just because it's easy to get cooped up during the winter doesn't mean it has to feel claustrophobic. Here are some of our favorite whole home remodeling tips for getting the most out of your small home.

Consider Decluttering

One way to make your home feel larger it did before is to get rid of all your clutter. When you live in a small home, townhouse or condo, it can quickly feel like you're boxed in when you are surrounded by too many items strewn everywhere – books, shoes, papers, and so on. You can try cubes or cubbies in any room that you need. Alternatively, consider putting these storage methods by doorways or in a larger home, a mudroom that is immensely useful in muddy weather.

Add Roll-out Cabinets

If your kitchen cabinets are a mess, then there's an easy way to overcome that. Don't lose your pots, pans, or containers anymore! When you have pullout cabinets, you won't have to dive in and hunt down what you need with a flashlight. If you're not sure what measurements you need, you can try standard designs or custom designs. And since they're so versatile, you can use them elsewhere around the house too, such as in the bathroom or in the laundry room.

Try Under Bed Storage

This tip might be one of the more unusual ones you've ever heard. But all the same, that shouldn't discourage you from trying it. Hiding things under the bed is not exactly a new idea, especially when your kids are attempting to make their room look a little neater. While pullout storage under the bed is an ingenious solution to consider during your next whole home remodeling project, it might not always be financially feasible. To achieve the same storage space, you could instead go to the store and find cubes or other organization methods.

Add Under Stair Storage

Open up that unused space under your stairway and add a closet, storage shelving or even a mini-office. Not use in letting the space go to waste.
