GIKINOO' AMAADIWIN - WE GAIN KNOWLEDGE

The PBS Documentary, "Gikinoo'amaadiwin - We Gain Knowledge," narrated by Winona LaDuke, and produced/directed by Lorraine Norrgard, describes the traditional ways of education in Ojibwe communities before European contact by highlighting the role of elders before European contact. The documentary also chronicles the painful period of the residential schools imposed by the government and the devastating consequences of this attempt to restrict and assimilate children into the Western system of education. Interviews with elders who experienced the missionary and government boarding schools in this region, and the resulting grief they caused are presented in this video. The documentary is concluded with a focus on tribal sovereignty today where Ojibwe communities determine their own approaches to education. Marvin Defoe, Red Cliff Tribal Historic Preservation Officer, and Lorraine Norrgard, Producer/Director, will be present to comment and answer questions. This video was one of six in the "Waasa Inaabidaa" series that won 5 Regional Emmy awards.

PERSONAL STORIES OF HEALTH CARE IN WASHBURN'S HISTORY

Who are the people in this photo? Come and find out and hear their stories. This talk is not a complete history of health care in our community, instead we will meet a few of the early and not so early doctors, nurses and other health care providers. We will hear their stories and there will be plenty of time to share some of your own stories and memories. Led by Doctor Donn Christensen and Friends.

PATSY'S IS THE PLACE!

Join Gary Holman and his musician pals as they recount in story and song the rich history of Patsy's Bar in Washburn. Reminisce with your family and friends in a special evening of memories.

THE ANDERSONS-SIX GENERATIONS OF COMMUNITY COMMITMENT!

One of the few early family businesses to survive and flourish in WASHBURN despite fires and economic turmoil. This story encompasses six generations beginning with Norwegian immigrants with only the clothes on their backs building a small grocery store to the largest retail business in Bayfield County and a family deeply committed to the betterment of WASHBURN. John Anderson—Presenter.
