TEACHING EXPERIENCE

Assistant Professor (MCF), Université Bordeaux Montaigne (American and Gender Studies)

Introduction to American Studies (LIA2Y5) Ongoing

Undergraduate course in American Studies introducing students to the basics of the history and sociology of the United States focusing in particular on several myths—and the realities—about the country including: the young nation; freedom of speech; capitalism and religion; frontiers and immigration; the “American Dream”; and communities.

Intermediate American Studies (LIA3Y8) Ongoing

Undergraduate course in American Studies exploring the history of native Americans, in particular the Cherokee, and the relationship between the U.S. federal government and tribal governments. Students also learn about the colonization and independence of Canada.

Art and Nation Building (LIA6Y4) Ongoing

Undergraduate course in American Studies introducing concepts of nationhood and symbolic boundaries used to analyze artistic production in the U.S. and its relation to the construction of an American “nation.”

Sociology of Gender and Sexuality (SOC110) Ongoing

Graduate course in Gender Studies introduces students to the basics of the sociology of gender and sexuality, including the fundamental theoretical texts and their application to contemporary research.

Research Methods in Gender Studies (SOC110) Ongoing

Graduate course in Gender Studies introduces students to research and writing methodology from an interdisciplinary perspective in preparation for the Master’s Thesis and publishing in journals.

Visiting Assistant Professor, Dickinson College (Sociology)

Social Analysis (SOC110) Spring 2016

Course introduces students to the basics of sociology, including its classical (Marx, Weber, Durkheim) and contemporary (Bourdieu, Foucault, Crenshaw) theories, its methods (qualitative and quantitative), and its major subfields (class, race, gender, sexuality, family, politics, culture, inequality, and privilege).

Sociology of Law and Politics (SOC1230) Spring 2016

Course introduces students to the sociology of law and public policy and is cross-listed with gender and sexualities studies. It takes an international comparative perspective to analyze the role of social actors (social movements, organizations, legislators, lawyers, judges, and the media) on defining social problems and shaping public policy.

Qualitative Methods (SOC1240) Spring 2016

Students in this seminar style course (maximum of 15) learn the basics of qualitative methods in sociology by conducting original research projects involving in-depth interviews. They also get introduced to ethnography and archival research. I train them to use qualitative analysis software.

Instructor, UCLA (Sociology/Undergraduate Initiatives)

Freshman Cluster Seminar (GE 72CW) Spring 2010, 2011, 2012, 2014

Title: Cross-Cultural Studies in Sexuality, Identity, and Politics
Developed and taught a writing intensive seminar for 20 first-year students for 4 spring quarters. Mentored students on original empirical research projects. Course completes last of three-quarter series that meets general education and writing requirements.

Independent Study Seminar (Soc199) Winter/Spring 2011

Title: Race, Class, and Gender in the “It Get’s Better” Campaign
Developed and taught research seminar on content analysis for 7 senior sociology majors. Advised students on research methods and writing strategies for final research papers.

Teaching Fellow, UCLA (Sociology/Undergraduate Initiatives)

Sex: From Biology to Gendered Society Freshman Cluster (GE 72) Fall/Winter 2010-2012

Taught twelve undergraduate sections for a selective freshmen interdisciplinary lecture course instructed by Arnold (Biology), Haselton (Evolutionary Psychology), Saguy (Sociology), and Vilain (Genetics).
