John's mystical painting of horses capture the "spirit of the horse". Growing up around his father put John at an early age around horses and animals. John's father was a cowboy and always had horses around. While a kid growing up on the coast of California, John watched animals coming in through the coastal morning fog. This fascinated John, and years later would be his inspiration for his unique style developing. Horses are considered one of the most challenging animals to paint, but John is captivated by them and has learned them. John has been an artist for his entire adult life coming from beginning art classes as a kid and growing up in the artist colony of Laguna Beach California. John's first major art focus has been sculpting in several mediums. However, painting horses was always at his core and emerged several years ago with watercolor as his first painting. John mastered this medium and has gone on to work with acrylic and oil. This gives John's work a whole other dimension to paint from.

John is a published artist and his artwork is being used by many companies and manufacturers on their items. His work is currently found on Roper Western Wear and can be found in many galleries throughout the US as well as gift and frame shops. John's work is licensed and published through Joan Cawley Gallery LTD and has been featured in many newspaper and magazine articles.
