

Robin L. Watkins

SAG/AFTRA

Robin has been working professionally as an actor since 1984 on the West Coast and up and down the East Coast, including New York and Orlando. He has performed in hundreds of stage productions, independent films, industrials, and commercials.

Robin is best known for his hilarious performance as The General in the Troma film Poultrygeist: Night of the Chicken Dead. Other principal film roles include Reverend Billy Oswald in Pretty Dead Things and Moonbeam in Splatter Disco.

Robin's favorite stage roles include sadistic dentist Orin Scrivello in Little Shop of Horrors, flesh peddler Marcus Lycus in A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum, evil brother Jonathan Brewster in Arsenic and Old Lace and his critically acclaimed role in Greater Tuna, where he was able to portray ten different characters.

Robin is also the founder and owner of Mysterical Players—producing, writing, and directing original comedy mysteries and his anthology series Midnite Stories.

Robin is a hard-working, energetic, adaptable, and versatile actor who is always looking for the opportunity to be involved in new, innovative projects in which he can use his diverse experience and talents.
