FEATHERS IN THE WIND

Today I am sitting in a house that for generations my ancestors have lived in. Every room seems to have a story not to mention objects in the rooms. Sometimes I feel as if I would just get up and walk across the hall I could find my Tanta Lulu or if I looked behind me I could see my Selzer Oma at that big oak table picking walnuts for the cakes she would bake for all those birthdays that seemed to group together in November and December.

Now this article would not be complete without a story so here goes--

It was the early part of November and my father and his older brother were playing near the corn auger. Suddenly Carl's pant leg got caught and my father went for help (his father)

Carl was badly hurt and taken to the room in our house to be attended to by ALL the Amana physicians. The bed with the pulleys was brought out and MANY prayers were said.

The next day the older Dr. Moerschel (William) came to check only to find of all the bones that had been broken the little finger had been overlooked.

It took weeks for Uncle Carl to heal and then he would learn to use his fingers for the fine motor skills by learning to cane thanks to Henrietta Marz.

Clean up at Marengo Plant is Complicated

Iowa Attorney General Brenna Bird's office is suing C6-Zero and its owner, Howard Brand, to force action on an emergency order to clean up the site the Marengo factory where an explosion and fire occurred December 8, according to a news release, January 11 from the Attorney General.

Ten to 15 people were injured and the surrounding neighborhood in Marengo evacuated for several hours when liquid solvent in a tank at the asphalt shingle recycling plant exploded. Over 20 emergency services, hazmat teams and fire departments, including the Amana Fire Department, were needed to subdue the blaze. Several people were seriously injured.

The suit is seeking to force C6-Zero to comply with the DNR's emergency order, issued December 15, to clean up the site by the end of January and to secure the site properly during cleanup.

According to the Attorney General's media release: C6-Zero operated a facility located at 810 E. South Street, Marengo, that used various flammable chemical solvents, diesel oil, and other hazardous chemicals to process used asphalt shingles for reuse in other products. The explosion and fire caused large quantities of contaminated runoff to enter a ditch that flows into the Iowa River, a drinking water source for nearby communities, including Iowa City. The runoff is temporarily being held in a retention pond in Marengo to prevent hazardous substances from reaching the Iowa River.

The C6-Zero building suffered substantial damage and remains without heat or power. Chemicals used at the facility remain on site in buckets, barrels, and gas tanks, along with large piles of loose, crushed shingles, and are exposed to wind, rain, and changing temperatures. Surface water samples taken at the C6-Zero facility From December 8-14, 2022, showed evidence of hazardous substances in excess of statewide water quality standards. The DNR determined a hazardous condition exists at the site.

On December 15, 2022, DNR Director Kayla Lyon issued an emergency order to C6-Zero to compel the immediate stabilization of all hazardous conditions and the removal and proper disposal of solid wastes on-site, as well as full remediation of the area. The order required C6-Zero to submit an environmental site assessment plan within 15 days, and complete the plan requirements within 45 days. When the DNR received a site assessment plan submitted after the deadline and contemplating completion in March 2023, DNR Director Lyon referred the matter to Attorney General Bird, requesting that she "take all legal action necessary to ensure compliance with the emergency order and Iowa law."

According to The Cedar Rapids Gazette, a company hired by C6-Zero was at the site December 14 using vacuum trucks to remove 31,000 gallons of petroleum products and water from the parking lot and loading bay and to perform other tasks. Water tests taken on December 9 showed a drainage ditch near the plant had diesel levels of 28,000 milligrams per liter, more than 12 times, higher than the state standard for stormwater. Benzene and waste oil also exceeded state standards.

The plant site is located in the Marengo industrial park, near the Iowa County Fairgrounds and not far from the Iowa River.

The company hired by C6-Zero to do the work estimated that it could clean up the site by March, but the Iowa DNR's emergency order states the job must be completed by January. Also the order requires that the site be insured, monitored and secured until clean up is finished.

Mark Corallo, a spokesman for C6-Zero told the Des Moines Register that the company denies the claim that they have not been compliant in working toward the deadlines and address all issues at the site.

Once he was able my Selzer Opa would carry him to a special wagon which my father would pull to the school. The school master (Mr. Seifert) would lift him out and bring him into the class.

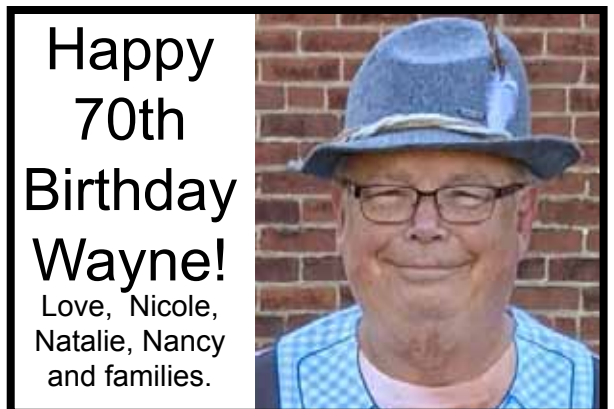

This would be repeated again and again until his last year in 1988 when Uncle Carl was dying of cancer. On Christmas day my Tanta called upstairs for help because he had collapsed. Luckily he leaned on my shoulder while they called for my father for help.

Between my father and husband he was brought to the bedroom where he passed away on Christmas morning.

I guess that was the day my father started to turn things over to me. He had me making the calls, reading from the Bible and other things.

I miss those days of being a girl and having parents taking care of me, but one grows up and without realizing it finds things change. Now I was and adult and if I could have but one wish it would be to go back to my childhood.
