Nearly a year after several flatbed trucks arrived in Hutchinson with mangled Saturn V rocket engine parts recovered from 14,000 feet beneath the surface of the Atlantic Ocean, the Cosmosphere's SpaceWorks division is about halfway through the process of cleaning, stabilizing and conserving an important part of the history of man's journey to the moon.

SpaceWorks was far enough along with two pieces, a heat exchanger and an injection plate, to ship them to New York last week for a ceremony in which the recovery team bankrolled and put together by Amazon.com CEO Jeff Bezos was honored with a Citation of Merit by the Explorers Club.

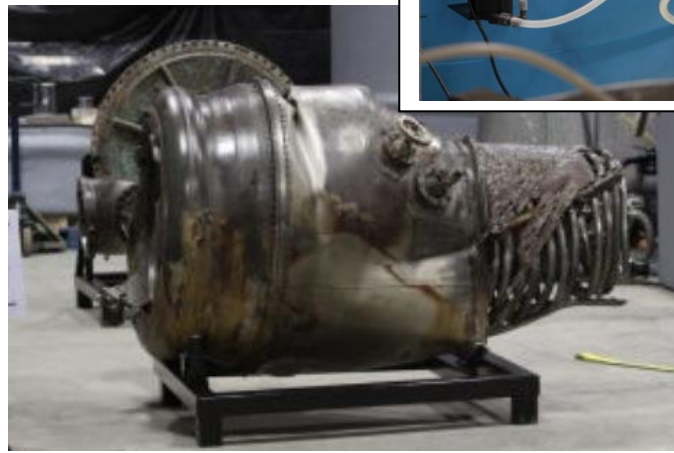

Each Saturn V rocket was powered by five F-1 rocket engines. Each engine was 19 feet tall, 12 feet in diameter and weighed 18,000 pounds.

"There have been preliminary conversations with NASA about the artifacts," Remar said. "But at this point there has been no determination about which museums will be able to acquire artifacts."

Cottonwood Hills Golf Course is Revived, will reopen in 2015 ~ Wichita banker-led group buys Cottonwood Hills course
www.hutchnews.com/news/local\_state\_news/article\_cf7c98e4-826a-58c0-a7ba-bbcd17e253cf.html (See Excerpts & Jest of story below, just in case N/A)

Drayton Alldritt, managing member of S&S Cottonwood, LLC., said that the group has purchased Cottonwood Hills Golf Course and they plan to reopen it in the spring of 2015.

Alldritt is a Wichita-based executive with Bank of America Merrill Lynch's global commercial banking unit, and managing member of the newly formed S&S Cottonwood, LLC. That entity recently bought the course and surrounding land at East Fourth Avenue and Buhler Road – about 619 acres combined – from the Bank of Camden, in Tennessee.

The 18-hole Cottonwood Hills was completed in 2007 and named by Golf Magazine as one of the top 10 new golf courses to play. Financial problems, however, led to a sheriff's sale in 2012.

The course was designed by professional golfer Nick Faldo's design company, and even though it sat idle, the course was built "the right way" and is in surprisingly good condition, Alldritt said Friday during an interview at the golf course.

Alldritt has known Lane Neville, the former Hutchinson resident and Arizona developer who first spearheaded the Cottonwood Hills project, for about 10 years. They met because Alldritt had business interests in Arizona.

Cottonwood Hills was a "challenging" course and a "quality course" when it first opened, said local golfer Chad Wintz. A reopened Cottonwood will be a nice addition to the golf community, Wintz said. ~

TSW Products changes it's name

Longtime Hutchinson manufacturer TSW Products Co. will change its name April 1 to Takako America Co., taking the name of its parent company in Japan.

TSW Products will change to Takako America Co. April 1

"The new name will reflect the evolving focus and quality standards of the company," said David Lansdowne, executive vice president of the Hutchinson plant, adding, "And this name change will help identify and associate with the global aspect of our parent company, Takako Industries of Kyoto, Japan, and sister company, Takako Vietnam Co., LTD, of the Singapore Industrial Park in Vietnam."

Takako Industries is a wholly owned subsidiary of KYB Corporation, headquartered in Tokyo, Japan. It founded the Hutchinson plant, at 715 Corey Road, in 1990, and it has served as the manufacturing base of Takako Industries in the Americas since that time.

The local plant, which employs 136 people, makes precision component parts for piston pumps that go into a wide variety of machinery for customers in the United States and internationally.

"The name change will help our customer base identify and associate with the world-class quality organization that Takako Industries is known to be around the world," Lansdowne said.

The company earlier this month announced a $3.8 million, 34,000-square-foot building expansion, which it expects to finish this year and eventually add 10 to 15 jobs.
