learn from experience

WORKSHOP DESCRIPTION

Using didactic, experiential, and the opportunity to observe a group, this workshop will give all of us an opportunity to learn through experimentation. We will use Agazarian's Functional Subgrouping and see what we discover (test the theory), including how this skill provides a method that promotes development and reduces our tendency to scapegoat and be scapegoated.

WHAT'S ALL THE "BROUHAHA" ABOUT SYSTEMS CENTERED GROUPS?

Functional Subgrouping:
What it is, what it isn't and how we use it to resolve conflict

ABOUT THE INSTITUTE

DAYNE NARRETTA, LCSW, CGP, BCD has been facilitating groups since 1992. She has done most of her group training through American Group Psychotherapy Association (AGPA) and its local affiliates including LGPS. She was introduced to Systems Centered group work in 2004 and continues her training in the Systems Centered Training and Research Institute. She has also been influenced by attachment theory as well as modern analytic theory. Dayne is a past president of LGPS, currently on the board for AGPA, and is a co-director for the Systems Centered Annual Conference. She has been a member of a systems centered training group since 2008.

WORKSHOP OBJECTIVES

1. Participants will discriminate the difference between stereotypical subgrouping and functional subgrouping.
2. Participants will learn and practice the skill of functional subgrouping and its effect on attunement.
3. Participants will learn how functional subgrouping manages conflict and helps the group develop by containing the different until the group is ready to take it in.
4. Participants will learn the difference between exploring and explaining.
