“This book is a court where memory and desire come to play and take turns as they bow to each other, teach each other the rules of the game, make poetic form a revelation of human insight.”

– ILYA KAMINSKY, Poet

Author of Dancing in Odessa and the Ecco Anthology of International Poetry; Co-Founder of Poets for Peace

“Linda Levokove remembers. Her poetry is a sensuous journey into memories that flutter forth with present immediacy.

We slept, curled like the pale noodles that had fallen on the terrazzo floor.

The imagery in her poetry is soft and sumptuous, a reminder of why we write poetry. She openly shares with her readers soft secrets that delight the senses. Highly recommended for those who have forgotten, or don't want to ever forget what it means to be human, to desire something or someone, and to be alive with emotion that must ultimately spill forth in words.”

– JACK TRAMMELL, Author & Poet

Author of Down on the Chickahominy:

The Life and Times of a Vanishing Virginia River
