What is a Phlebotomist?

A Phlebotomist Technician is a member of the health care and interdisciplinary team. Phlebotomist duties include collecting blood and blood related specimens for diagnostic purposes, as ordered by the physician or other authorized health care provider.

A Phlebotomist performs a variety of venipuncture techniques involved in the collection of blood specimens, labeling, storing, and shipping specimens for laboratory procedures. The Phlebotomist is also responsible for the clerical tasks associated with the collected specimen.

Since phlebotomists have an extremely high potential to be exposed to blood borne diseases and contaminants, the level of caution and expertise they use in the execution of their duties is critical to their own safety as well as all others that may be exposed to the fluid samples they draw. Prior to collection, it is the phlebotomist's responsibility to assure that all collection instruments and environments are sterile and of first use.

The Phlebotomist Annual Salary

According to the November 2010, Bureau of Labor Statistics, full time phlebotomist are expected to make an average salary between $39,000 to $47,000 a year. This number will continue to increase as the demand for phlebotomist continue to rise.

Phlebotomist can work in any area where there is a need for blood collection, just to name a few examples: hospitals, clinics, doctor's offices, and per diem.
