

in March

This month, we have seen [redacted] express her love of reading and books, which are such an important tool for learning as they encourage language development, form social interactions, ignite imaginations and provide knowledge about the world around us!

During free play, [redacted] will often independently select a book and sit to read it in the reading corner, or bring it to a teacher to request them to read it for her. As part of phonics this month, we read "The Three Billy Goats Gruff" and [redacted] particularly enjoyed this story, often choosing it from the reading corner in the following days and enthusiastically taking part in role playing the story and "trip trapping over the bridge" with Nicki being the troll! We enjoyed reading [redacted]'s book from home for her birthday too, she helped the teachers by filling in some of the words to the other children.

We will continue to support [redacted]'s love of reading and provide lots of fun activities centered around books to encourage and consolidate her enjoyment of them.