How I Stay in Recovery on the Road (One Day At A Time)

Traveling away from home can be a difficult time for a compulsive overeater like me. Surprisingly, I am still a compulsive overeater away from home. Because I travel often, I have developed some techniques that help me to stay abstinent and in recovery on the road. Here they are:

1. Before my trip:

- a. Visit www.oa.org and look up meetings where I will be
- b. Put all meetings held in the location on my schedule, before any other appointment or activity, so that I can "fit my trip into OA", not try to "fit OA into my trip"
- c. Call the contact persons listed for the specific meetings to verify the info and to let them know I will be visiting. This way I don't feel like a stranger when I arrive, plus I tell them I would like outreach calls when in town.
- d. Go to the local intergroup website for the area that I am visiting and find names to call before I leave for my trip...and call them!
- e. If I don't have a car, ask for a ride to the meeting, or take public transportation
- f. Pack my Big Book and daily meditation books (or have them on your smart phone, tablet, or e-reader)
- 2. Recovery while in the air:
  - a. Planning ahead is the key. I do not leave my food to chance
  - b. I have large blue insulated cooler bags (fits nicely in overhead bin and if heavy, I have a small fold up wheelie to schlep it through the airport)
    - i. I pack my lunch in large plastic containers
    - ii. TSA allows all frozen items through security
    - iii. I put a few frozen ice packs inside and remove them and put them in my checked luggage at check-in if they do not have a hard case, if I am checking a bag. TSA now allows hard case frozen ice packs through security.
    - iv. I keep several large zip lock bags in the cooler bag and fill with ice at home, then dump the ice at security and refill on other side of security at a fast food ice machine. This technique keeps the food nice and cold for the entire trip. If ice melts, refill at arriving airport
    - v. I use this technique every day to haul around abstinent food on the trip and I also have a smaller insulated pack for day trips
    - vi. I drink lots of water on the plane. I bring an empty water bottle or I get free water in a large cup from a food vendor (Starbucks has nice large plastic cups), carry it on board, and have the flight attendant refill often. I don't pay $5 for airport water bottles!
- 3. At destination:
  - a. Request a room with a refrigerator. Hotels will not charge for one if I state that it is for medical purposes.
  - b. I pack some of my breakfast food and buy the rest at a store, or buy at hotel
  - c. Plan ahead for meals and go online to look up restaurant menus
  - d. Go to meetings, make outreach calls to local members
  - e. If meetings are not available, go to telephone meetings found at www.oa.org
  - f. Do all of the recovery activities on the road that I do at home; my disease does not go on vacation if I do!

I ask myself, what am I NOT willing to do to recover while on the road?

~Greg L.

Top-10 List of Things...That Help My Recovery Most

10. Service (is slimming): When I don't want to share in a meeting or even go to a meeting or make phone calls, I remind myself that it's all service and that service is slimming. If I want to lose weight, I have to give service.

9. Writing (face your stuff or stuff your face): If I can pick up a pencil instead of a fork when I feel like compulsively overeating, I can find out what's really "eating me" and save myself from the misery of overeating.

8. Literature (just for today): I don't have to read any whole book ever. I can read one Lifeline article, one For Today page, one daily meditation, and one section in the Big Book. Every few paragraphs contain some nugget of nourishment for my soul.

7. Meetings (carry the message to those who still suffer): When I don't feel like attending my meeting or think I don't have to because I don't need it, I remind myself of the purpose of every meeting to bring the message to the still suffering and of how I'd feel as a newcomer to walk into an empty room.

6. Ninth Step (the promises): I worked through early steps with the faith that the promises would be fulfilled once I completed Step Nine. I found so many fulfilled before Step Nine, I figured nothing further would happen when I got to Nine. I'm only halfway through Nine, have blown past a weight that would have satisfied me and am quickly approaching my lowest weight in 25 years.

5. Fifth Step ("and to another human being"): God and I already knew what a wretched-creature I was. Telling someone else made it both so much more real and less serious. Now that I don't hold all those secrets alone, they seem far less powerful.

4. My Sponsors (someone who has what you want): I "designed" my sponsor before I ever went to a meeting. I wanted an active, fit woman of my faith with more than 10 years of abstinence and who had an active and fit sponsor with more than 15 years of abstinence. At the meeting there were only two sponsors to choose from, and only one was taking new people. She did not fit my bill exactly, and after working with her for three years, I've added a second sponsor who has the rest of the characteristics I was seeking.

3. Humility (I can't. God can. I think I'll let him.): Having been unsuccessful on my own, I decided to let a bunch of compulsive overeaters help me recover, and the first thing they told me is that God's going to take care of this for me.

2. Willingness: (go to any lengths): Whatever the program says, I do it. Whatever the steps are, I work them. Whatever the tools are, I use them. Whatever my sponsor suggests, I do it. I have hated a lot of these ideas, but again, I wasn't successful using my techniques, and I decided the only way to give this program a fair try was to follow it as thoroughly as I can.

1. God (turn it over): All I have to do is work the Steps and use the tools; God is taking care of my weight. I stay off the scale in between monthly weigh-ins and trust that if my weight goes up or down drastically, I'll notice. ~Mard, Arizona (Lifeline March/April 2014)
