- Most abundant protein in body
- Major building block in bones, skin, muscles, tendons, and ligaments
- The “glue” that holds the body together
- Collagen must be consumed in diet to support body’s own production

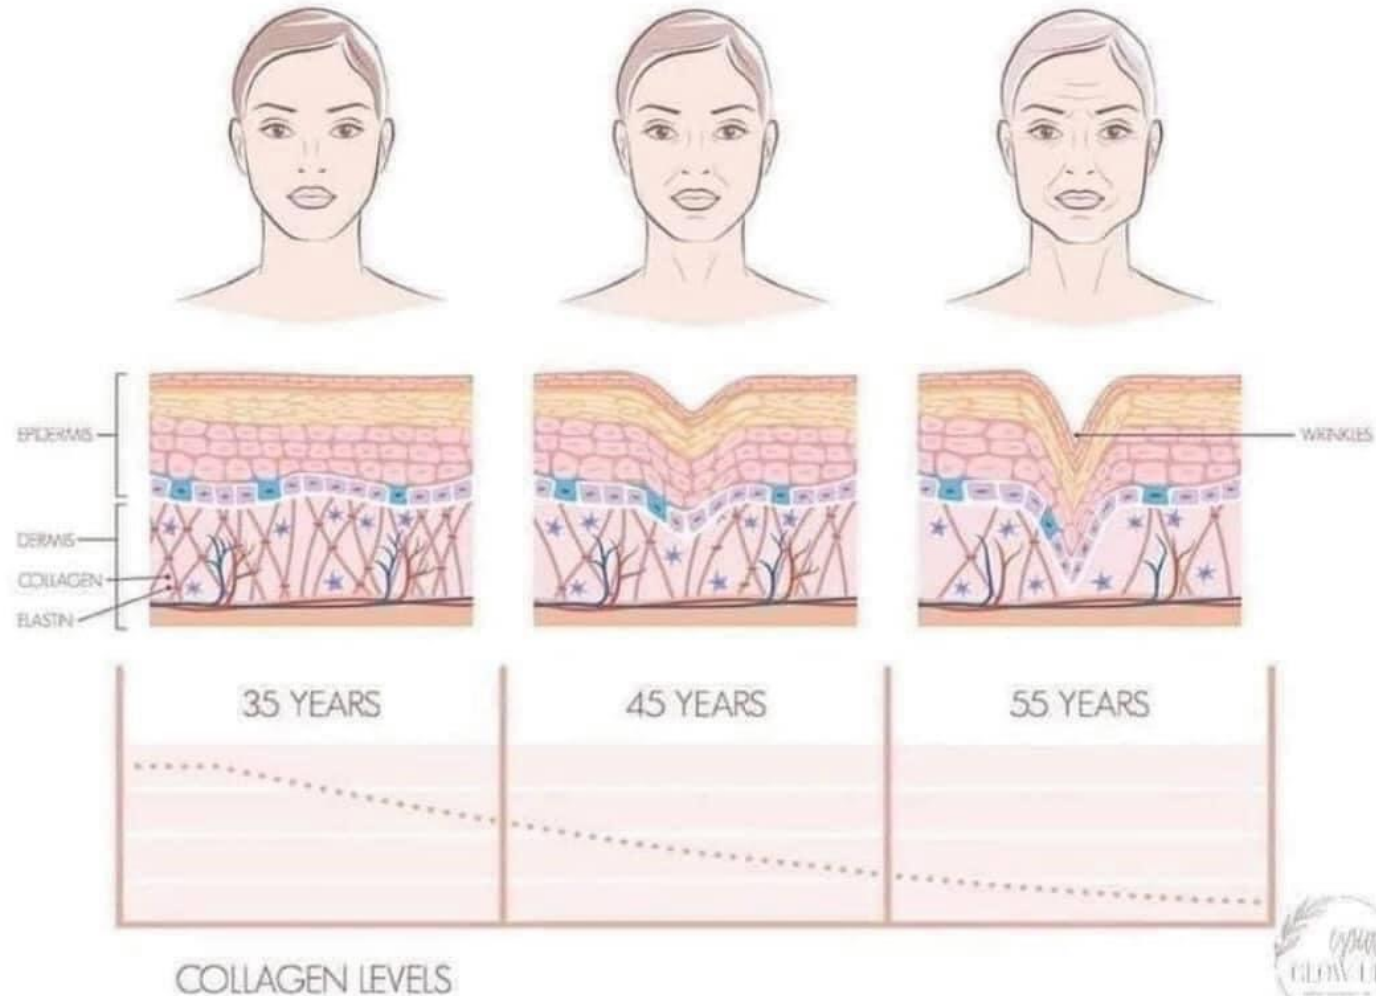

Collagen Types

- Over 20 types of collagen have been identified, but main types in body are:
 - Type I – Most common and found in hair, skin, nails, bones, ligaments, and tendons
 - Type II – Found mainly in cartilage
 - Type III – Found alongside type I and in blood vessels and internal organs
- All collagen types unique due to amino acid profile and concentration of glycine, proline, and hydroxyproline

COLLAGEN LEVELS MAY DECREASE UP TO 30% PER DECADE (AFTER AGE 30)

PRODUCT SCIENCE

Crafted from the best that science and nature have to offer...OVER 200 Scientists with 10 years+ of research and development to bring to the market

MARINE COLLAGEN

It could be one of the ocean's greatest gifts! It's composed mostly of type I collagen, which is rich in key amino acids. These are the building blocks that support the body's natural production of collagen. Your hair, skin, and nails — and other vital parts of the body — rely on them. And it's where you get that radiant natural glow from within.

STUDIES SHOW...

DOSE: You need a minimum of 2.5 grams of Collagen DAILY to see any real results.

SOURCE: Marine collagen is type 1, most like human collagen and the best for skin elasticity and reducing signs of aging.

BOTTLING: Multi-use/plastic bottles require use of preservatives as collagen will oxidize.
